ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

In an effort to learn as much as possible about the current process for determining financial eligibility for the assignment of counsel in New York State, in 2015 and again in 2019, the Office of Indigent Legal Services (ILS) surveyed judges and providers, conducted public hearings, and elicited written commentary. We are indebted to the Office of Court Administration for its assistance in distributing surveys to judges and securing venues for the public hearings, and to members of the ILS Board and the New York State Unified Court System’s Commission on Parental Legal Representation (hereinafter, the “DiFiore Commission”) for participating in the hearing process. We wish to acknowledge the many magistrates, judges, and providers of mandated representation who took the time and made the effort to complete the surveys. We also wish to acknowledge the many people who participated in the public hearings, either through oral testimony, written commentary, or both. These individuals are identified in Appendix C to these Standards.

Additionally, we are grateful for the tremendous guidance that we received from various reports, including: the National Legal Aid and Defender Association’s 1976 report, Guidelines for Legal Defense Systems in the United States; the Third Judicial Department’s 1977 Memorandum entitled, Assignment of Attorneys to Represent Individuals Who are Financially Unable to Obtain Counsel; the American Bar Association, Standards for Criminal Justice: Providing Defense Services (3d ed. 1992); the New York State Defenders Association 1994 report, Determining Eligibility for Appointed Counsel in New York State: A Report from the Public Defense Backup Center; the ABA Ten Principles of a Public Defense Delivery System (2002); the Brennan Center for Justice’s 2008 report, Eligible for Justice: Guidelines for Appointing Defense Counsel; New York State Bar Association Task Force on Family Court Final Report (2013); and the Commission on Parental Legal Representation Interim Report to Chief Judge DiFiore (2019). We particularly want to thank the staff of the New York State Defenders Association, who have studied this issue for over three decades, and whose insight and experiences proved invaluable to the development of these Standards.

INTRODUCTION

“Standards are the key to uniform quality in all essential governmental functions. In the indigent defense area, uniform application of standards at the state or national level is an important means of limiting arbitrary disparities in the quality of representation based solely on the location in which a prosecution is brought.”
-Redefining Leadership for Equal Justice: Final Report of the National Symposium on Indigent Defense 2000, Office of Justice Programs/Bureau of Justice Assistance, U.S. Department of Justice 2001, at 14.

In accordance with federal and New York State law, article 18-B of the County Law provides for free legal representation in criminal cases and certain family law matters for people who cannot afford to pay for a lawyer. ILS, with the approval of its Board, issues the following Standards (rev. December 2020) pursuant to its responsibility under Executive Law § 832(3)(c) to establish “criteria and procedures to guide courts in determining whether a person is eligible” for publicly funded legal representation.

In 1963, the United States Supreme Court pronounced that “[t]he right of one charged with a crime to counsel may not be deemed fundamental and essential to a fair trial in some countries, but it is in ours.”¹ Thus, held the Court, individuals charged with a felony who cannot afford counsel must have one appointed to them. Two years later, the New York State Court of Appeals made it clear that the right to appointed counsel applies in non-felony as well as felony cases, and that defendants must be explicitly told at arraignment that if they cannot afford counsel, one will be appointed to them.² The New York State Legislature responded by enacting County Law Article 18-B, which imposes upon counties the responsibility – and hence the costs – of providing counsel for defendants who are entitled to assigned counsel.

In 1972, the New York State Court of Appeals recognized that parents involved in child welfare proceedings have a right to assigned counsel under the New York State Constitution.³ In 1975

³ Matter of Ella B., 30 N.Y.2d 352 (1972). Ella B. involved a child neglect proceeding under Article 10 of the Family Court Act. At Mrs. B.’s first appearance in court to respond to the local department of social services neglect petition against her, the judge informed her that if she wanted an attorney she had to find one herself and pay the attorney “out of her own funds.” 30 N.Y.2d at 358. He then asked if she wanted an attorney, to which she answered “No.” Id. After Mrs. B. answered “yes” to his question whether she admitted to “the facts in the petition”, the judge entered an order finding Mrs. B.’s daughter a neglected child and placed the child in the custody of the department of social services. The Court of Appeals held that “an indigent parent, faced with the loss of a child’s society, as well as the possibility of criminal charges, is entitled to the assistance of counsel. . . . Once the conclusion is reached that one has a the Legislature amended the Family Court Act to codify the right to assigned counsel for parents and other specified adults in a range of family-related matters.⁴ In certain circumstances, explicit notice of that right must be given to individuals.⁵ And, pursuant to Family Court Act § 262(c), as with indigent criminal defense, the Legislature delegated the fiscal and administrative responsibility for parental representation to the counties under County Law Article 18-B.

Although it has long been held that courts have inherent power to provide counsel to indigent persons charged with a crime, and therefore to assess when a person is unable to afford the costs of representation,⁶ in most counties providers of mandated representation make the initial determinations of financial eligibility.

Prior to 2016 when ILS adopted standards for criminal cases only, there had been no statewide standards for determining when individuals are financially eligible for the assignment of counsel. Lack of standards resulted in inconsistent decisions and often inadequate protection of the right to assigned counsel in New York.

In annual reports dating back to 1989, the New York State Commission on Judicial Conduct identified the lack of uniform standards as a critical issue adversely affecting many defendants.⁷ In its 2001 report, the Commission stated as follows:

Among the complications confronting judges in [the process of appointing counsel] are the disparate eligibility standards from county to county and the varying means by which eligibility determinations are made. . . .

In one situation brought to the Commission’s attention last year, a judge, based on an interpretation of written guidelines from the public defender, sought to deny assigned counsel to a minor defendant solely because the defendant’s parents owned a home. Even if it were permissible to include parental assets in a determination of eligibility, further inquiry would have been required, to determine, for example, whether the parents refused to support the child, or whether they had enough equity in the house to sustain a loan against it, or whether the value of the house was sufficient to cover legal fees. In other cases, defendants whose income is below the poverty level are denied counsel. Some defendants are denied assigned counsel because they are employed or expect to be employed soon – without any effort by the judge to ascertain whether the right to be represented by assigned counsel . . . it follows that one is entitled to be so advised.” Id. at 356–57 (internal citations omitted).

Beisheim*, 34 A.D.2d 329, 333 (2nd Dept. 1970) (holding that a trial court has the “inherent power [as part of] its constitutional and statutory duty to furnish counsel to every indigent defendant charged with a crime,” and thus to determine when a defendant is unable to afford counsel).

defendant can afford to retain counsel, notwithstanding the employment or prospective employment. . . .

It has been the Commission's experience that some judges take inadequate steps to safeguard the important right to counsel.⁸

This report discussed favorably a 1994 report issued by the New York State Defenders Association (NYSDA), which had reviewed and assessed assigned counsel eligibility determination processes across New York State. In its report, NYSDA summarized its findings as follows: "empirical survey data confirm what our experience has long revealed – the inequitable, disparate and arbitrary methods used for determining eligibility for public representation in counties throughout the state critically undermine the right to counsel of all criminal defendants."⁹ NYSDA called for comprehensive change to ensure consistent and uniform implementation of publicly funded defense services throughout the state.¹⁰

In February 2004, the Commission on the Future of Indigent Defense Services (commonly known as the "Kaye Commission") was convened by then-Chief Judge Judith Kaye to "examine the effectiveness of indigent criminal defense services across the State and consider alternative models of assigning, supervising and financing assigned counsel compatible with New York's constitutional and fiscal realities."¹¹ In 2006, the Kaye Commission issued its Final Report, concluding as follows:

[T]he indigent defense system in New York State is both severely dysfunctional and structurally incapable of providing each poor defendant with the effective legal representation that he or she is guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States and the Constitution and laws of the State of New York ... [and] has resulted in a disparate, inequitable, and ineffective system for securing constitutional guarantees to those too poor to obtain counsel of their own choosing.¹²

The Kaye Commission noted the lack of statewide, uniform standards for determining eligibility for assigned counsel. In this regard, the Commission found that "[t]here are no clear standards regarding eligibility determinations and procedures,” and that “guidelines for the appointment of counsel exist only in a few counties and that even in those counties, the guidelines were not uniformly applied.”¹³ As a result, “a defendant may be deemed eligible for the appointment of counsel in one county and ineligible in a neighboring county or even in a different court within the same county.”¹⁴

Family court litigants face similar issues in the absence of statewide, uniform financial eligibility standards. Although its mandate was limited to indigent criminal defense, in its 2005 Interim Report, the Kaye Commission noted that the same systemic deficiencies existed in both criminal court and family court representation, including the lack of uniform standards for litigant financial eligibility.¹⁵ Similarly, testimony cited in the 2013 final report of the New York State Bar Association’s Task Force on Family Court “described determinations of inability to afford counsel that were inconsistent from jurisdiction to jurisdiction and in some instances involved a broad use of discretion that did not appear to fulfill statutory intent.”¹⁶ The Family Court Task Force recommended the adoption of statewide standards for family court litigants “that would establish a greater degree of consistency, predictability and equity in the assignment of counsel through the use of agreed upon standards that jurists could apply in disparate communities.”¹⁷

The Family Court Task Force’s Subcommittee on Resources for Individual Litigants suggested practical measures to increase transparency in the system:

Individual courthouses should offer litigants a way to assess whether or not assigned counsel can be an option for them. So-called “portals” could be established and provide forms or online information to serve this purpose. Litigants could use these portals to review county specific information as well as statewide protocols. Information could include the standard of income which qualifies someone for counsel, as well as what kinds of resources, such as houses or cars, are included or excluded from the determination of eligibility. Litigants need to know why they do not qualify for assigned counsel. If they disagree with a denial, they should be told what options they have to either question the denial or seek other avenues for free or low cost representation.¹⁸

More recently, the February 2019 report of the DiFiore Commission documented the lack of uniform, consistently applied financial eligibility standards in family court.¹⁹ Public testimony, written commentary, and survey responses from judges and providers “demonstrated that criteria and procedures for determining financial eligibility vary even within the courthouse in counties where there is more than one Family Court judge.”²⁰ Summarizing core issues, one witness said that “judges are inconsistent in determining financial eligibility, and many litigants with modest incomes are found ineligible” and that “two individuals in virtually the same situation can have very different results when they apply for assigned counsel, if they live in different counties.”²¹

During the public hearings held by the DiFiore Commission in 2018 and by ILS in 2019, numerous witnesses highlighted the disparity in eligibility determinations in criminal court and family court. For example, an assigned counsel plan administrator testified that: “We can often assign someone for the criminal matters but not for the family court matter unless a judge overrides our decision. Judges have commented to us regularly how unfair a process this is for the parties before the court.”²² As the New York State Defenders Association observed: “Since County Law § 722 uses the same standard for the appointment of counsel in all cases – ‘financially unable to obtain counsel’ – it follows that the same general criteria and procedures should be used for eligibility determinations in all mandated representation matters.”²³

The New York State Bar Association Committee on Families and the Law underscored the rationale for uniform financial eligibility determinations in family court matters:

Effective and prompt provision of counsel to parents is critical to one facing a loss of liberty or parental rights, and counsel should be assigned whenever one demonstrably possesses inadequate financial ability to hire an attorney. Gross differences between jurisdictions and among providers that result in a deprivation of the right to counsel in some jurisdictions must be addressed. Fair and

For similar testimony, see written submission to DiFiore Commission of Daryl Bloom, Cattaraugus Public Defender (“It is incongruent to have two separate financial eligibility and caseload standards in the representation of indigent people: One for family court proceedings and one for criminal proceedings. Both matters are constitutionally recognized and intrinsically of equal importance. It is time for family court reform in New York State; the rule of law depends on quality representation to all people, not based on one’s financial capacity.”); written submission of Robert Convissar, Erie County Assigned Counsel Administrator, to ILS Family Court Eligibility Hearings (“I believe that the time has come to end the disparate treatment accorded to the indigent in family court. . . . It cannot be said that the right to the custody of one’s child, the possibility of incarceration on a willful violation of support, or the termination of one’s parental rights is any less significant than the result of a criminal conviction. The disparity between eligibility standards leaves many potential indigent clients unrepresented in family court.”).

reasonable criteria for determining presumptive eligibility for assigned counsel that allow for discretionary factors in the interest of justice should be established with some uniformity.²⁴

To prevent “inconsistent decisions and inadequate protection of the right to counsel,” the DiFiore Commission urged adoption of “easily understandable, equitable, efficient, and fair” standards for determining financial eligibility for assigned counsel in family court matters.²⁵ As a practical matter, the Commission observed that “[u]niform standards will also save the time and resources of the parties, the courts, and others involved in the eligibility determination process.”²⁶

The Hurrell-Harring v. The State of New York Lawsuit and Settlement

In 2007, on the heels of the Kaye Commission’s report, the New York Civil Liberties Union (NYCLU) sued New York State alleging that the State has systematically and structurally denied meaningful and effective representation to defendants entitled to publicly funded representation.²⁷ In this lawsuit, Hurrell-Harring v. The State of New York, NYCLU identified several flaws of New York’s public defense system, including “incoherent or excessively restrictive client eligibility standards” that result in the “wrongful denial of representation.”²⁸

In October 2014, the parties to Hurrell-Harring agreed to an Order of Stipulation and Settlement (hereinafter, the “Settlement”), which was approved by the Albany County Supreme Court on March 11, 2015. The Settlement requires New York State to enhance “constitutionally mandated publicly funded representation in criminal cases for people who are unable to afford counsel”²⁹ in four key areas: Counsel at Arraignment; Caseload Relief; Initiatives to Improve the Quality of Indigent Defense; and Eligibility Standards for Representation. The New York State Office of Indigent Legal Services (ILS), created in 2010 under Executive Law § 832, accepted the responsibility of working with the parties to implement the Settlement.³⁰

Focusing specifically on financial eligibility for assignment of counsel in criminal cases, Section VI of the Settlement requires that ILS “issue criteria and procedures to guide courts in counties outside of New York City in determining whether a person is eligible for Mandated Representation.” The Settlement prescribes that, at a minimum, the criteria and procedures shall provide that:

- (1) eligibility determinations shall be made pursuant to written criteria;
- (2) confidentiality shall be maintained for all information submitted for purposes of assessing eligibility;
- (3) ability to post bond shall not be consider[ed] sufficient, standing alone, to deny eligibility;
- (4) eligibility determinations shall take into account the actual cost of retaining a private attorney in the relevant jurisdiction for the category of crime charged;
- (5) income needed to meet the reasonable living expenses of the applicant and any dependent minors within his or her immediate family, or dependent parent or spouse, should not be considered available for purposes of determining eligibility; and
- (6) ownership of an automobile should not be considered sufficient, standing alone, to deny eligibility where the automobile is necessary for the applicant to maintain his or her employment.³¹

In addition to these prescriptions, the Settlement requires that ILS consider the following in establishing criminal court eligibility criteria and procedures:

- (7) whether screening for eligibility should be performed by the primary provider of Mandated Representation in the county;
- (8) whether persons who receive public benefits, cannot post bond, reside in correctional or mental health facilities, or have incomes below a fixed multiple of [the] federal poverty guidelines should be deemed presumed eligible and be represented by public defense counsel until that representation is waived or a determination is made that they are able to afford private counsel;
- (9) whether (a) non-liquid assets and (b) income and assets of family members should be considered available for purposes of determining eligibility;
- (10) whether debts and other financial obligations should be considered in determining eligibility;
- (11) whether ownership of a home and ownership of an automobile, other than an automobile necessary for the applicant to maintain his or her employment, should be considered sufficient, standing alone, to deny eligibility; and
- (12) whether there should be a process for appealing any denial of eligibility and notice of that process should be provided to any person denied counsel.³²

ILS Authority and Obligation to Issue Financial Eligibility Standards

In accordance with the Hurrell-Harring settlement, in 2016 ILS first issued criteria and procedures for determining assigned counsel eligibility for criminal cases only, and only in counties outside of New York City.³³ However, ILS' authority to issue assigned counsel

³¹ Settlement, § VI (B).

³³ New York State Office of Indigent Legal Services, Criteria and Procedures for Determining Assigned Counsel Eligibility: Blackletter with Commentary (April 4, 2016), available at eligibility standards derives not just from the Settlement, but also from ILS' implementing statute. Specifically, Executive Law § 832(3)(c) authorizes ILS to establish "criteria and procedures to guide courts in determining whether a person is eligible" for representation in criminal cases and certain family matters as delineated in article 18-B of the County Law. The Executive Law also authorizes ILS to collect information and data regarding assigned counsel eligibility determinations.³⁴

In 2016, ILS noted its intent to issue separate Standards relating specifically to financial eligibility for family court mandated representation in compliance with its statutory duty under Executive Law § 832(3)(c).³⁵ As further documented by the information received through public hearings held in 2019, written commentary, and surveys, as well as thorough analysis of the original criteria and procedures, ILS has determined that, as herein revised, the standards issued in 2016 are appropriately applicable to all mandated representation. Thus, separate standards are not necessary for determining eligibility for assigned counsel in family court cases.

The Process ILS Used to Develop These Eligibility Standards

1. Review of existing reports, eligibility guidelines, professional standards, and case law

ILS initiated the process of developing these eligibility determination criteria and procedures by reviewing national and state-specific research on procedures, criteria, and guidelines for determining eligibility for assignment of counsel, professional and ethical standards and guidelines, and case law. The results of this research are cited throughout the commentary that accompanies each criterion and procedure, but some documents merit highlighting. First are the 2008 guidelines promulgated by the Brennan Center for Justice, entitled Eligible for Justice: Guidelines for Appointing Defense Counsel (hereinafter, the "Brennan Center Guidelines"). In these guidelines, the Brennan Center notes that "neither the Supreme Court, nor any other source, has detailed how communities should determine who can afford counsel."³⁶ Drawing upon best practices from across the nation, the Brennan Center sets forth a series of recommended guidelines for determining financial eligibility for assignment of counsel.

While the Brennan Center Guidelines are national in scope, for New York State-specific information and guidance, ILS turned to a February 1977 Memorandum written by Richard J. Comiskey, then-Director of the Third Judicial Department, entitled "Assignment of Attorneys to Represent Individuals who are Financially Unable to Obtain Counsel." This Memorandum was prepared at the direction of Harold E. Koreman, then-Presiding Justice of the Appellate Division, Third Judicial Department, and its guidelines were intended to apply throughout the Third Judicial Department. The Memorandum begins with the principle that "[f]inancial inability to afford counsel is not synonymous with destitution or a total absence of means. Nor are the standards used to determine indigency for other purposes controlling.”³⁷ The guidelines set forth in the 1977 Memorandum hold true to this principle, and for that reason, have served as an important resource for ILS’ Standards. In a similar vein, ILS found helpful a 2005 Memorandum written by Hon. Joseph M. Lauria, then-Administrative Judge of the New York City Family Court, entitled “Uniform Criteria for Assignment of Counsel and Eligibility Form,” which sets out guidelines for assignment of counsel to adults in New York City Family Court, including establishment of presumptive eligibility for assigned counsel at 250% of the federal poverty guidelines.

ILS also looked to the New York State Defenders Association’s 1994 report, Determining Eligibility for Appointed Counsel in New York State: A Report from the Public Defense Backup Center (hereinafter, “1994 NYSDA report”). The information that ILS learned from surveys and public hearings, discussed next, highlights that NYSDA’s report is just as relevant today as it was twenty years ago. NYSDA supplemented its 1994 report with a written statement submitted to ILS in August 2015.³⁸ In this statement, NYSDA sets forth a series of recommendations for determining financial eligibility for assignment of counsel. Additionally, ILS drew upon national standards regarding criminal defense, with a particular focus on the following: the American Bar Association (ABA), Ten Principles of a Public Defense Delivery System (2002); ABA Standards for Criminal Justice: Providing Defense Services (3rd ed. 1992); and the National Legal Aid and Defender Association, Guidelines for Legal Defense Systems in the United States (1976).

Specific to financial eligibility for assigned counsel in family matters, ILS reviewed the 2013 Final Report of the New York State Bar Association’s Task Force on Family Court and the 2019 Interim Report to Chief Judge DiFiore issued by the Office of Court Administration’s Commission on Parental Legal Representation. Both reports amplify the extent to which litigants are inappropriately denied assigned counsel due to the lack of statewide standards for determining financial eligibility in family court proceedings.

2. Surveys of Courts and Providers

In 2015, with the assistance of the Office of Court Administration, the New York State Magistrates Association, and the New York State Association of Counties, ILS conducted an on-line survey of a representative sample of city and county courts, presidents of county magistrates associations, and providers of public defense services in each of the fifty-seven counties outside New York City on the procedures and criteria used to determine eligibility for assignment of counsel. Survey respondents were also asked for copies of written instruments – such as application forms or financial guidelines – used in determining eligibility. Appendix A details the number of responses and forms ILS received, and from which counties.

ILS undertook a similar process regarding the procedures and criteria used to determine eligibility for assignment of counsel in family court. Between July and September 2019, with the assistance of the Office of Court Administration, ILS surveyed parental representation providers, as well as family court judges and administrators in each judicial district and each county. Each group was asked the same questions, and survey respondents were asked for copies of written instruments used in determining eligibility.

3. Public Hearings

In July and August 2015, ILS conducted a series of eight public hearings regarding the eligibility determination processes in criminal cases used in the fifty-seven counties outside of New York City (hereinafter, “public hearings”). Similarly, in May, June, July, and August 2019, ILS held public hearings and solicited written commentary specifically about financial eligibility for the assignment of counsel in family court matters. The notice for the 2015 criminal court hearings and the notice for the 2019 ILS family court eligibility hearings are attached as Appendix B. These hearings elicited a wealth of information from a variety of stakeholders, including providers of mandated representation, judges, magistrates, county officials, providers of civil legal services, people who had faced criminal charges or who had cases in family court, and other people who have opinions about the eligibility determination process. Attached as Appendix C is a list of the individuals who testified at each public hearing and a list of those individuals and organizations that provided written submissions at both sets of hearings.

These surveys and public hearings helped ILS better understand the current state of the eligibility determination processes for criminal and family court mandated representation across New York State, and in so doing, highlighted the need for uniform, written standards. The information learned from both the surveys and the public hearings is outlined in the report that accompanied the 2016 standards, Determining Eligibility for Assignment of Counsel in New York: A Study of Current Criteria and Procedures and Recommendations for Improvement (2016) (hereinafter “ILS Criminal Court Study”). Many of the recommendations submitted during the public hearings have been incorporated into these Standards.

4. Themes that emerged from the surveys, applications, and public hearings

Several important themes emerged during ILS’ information gathering process. They include the following:

- i. The need for uniformity and transparency: Many public hearing participants discussed the inconsistency and opacity in the current assigned counsel eligibility determination processes and thus the need for uniform, consistent, easily understandable, and transparent assigned counsel Standards. Participants also stated that, although the eligibility guidelines should apply statewide, they should honor jurisdictional differences.
- ii. The need for consistency in Standards in all mandated representation cases: Written submissions, public hearing testimony, and survey responses submitted to ILS in 2019 regarding family court eligibility revealed overwhelming support for applying the same standards in family court and criminal court eligibility determinations. Many witnesses emphasized the need for uniform and consistently applied guidelines to ensure that adult family court litigants are not inappropriately denied access to counsel when they are unable to afford effective representation. As one witness wrote: “It cannot be said that the right to the custody of one’s child, the possibility of incarceration on a willful violation of support, or the termination of one’s parental rights is any less significant than the result of a criminal conviction. The disparity between eligibility standards leaves many potential indigent clients unrepresented in family court.”³⁹ Emphasizing that “important liberty interests are involved in Family Court, as they are in criminal matters,” NYSDA urged that ILS “apply the same thorough and detailed standards of eligibility to Family Court that are provided in the ILS Criteria and Procedures for Determining Assigned Counsel Eligibility (2016), provide commentary as needed to explain their use in this setting, and set forth what few, if any, additional or different criteria and procedures are warranted.”⁴⁰ Indeed, the public hearings revealed that, as of 2019, some counties were already applying the criminal court standards to family court cases. As one witness explained:

To do otherwise would have been the source of much confusion, as well as potentially absurd outcomes. For example, a client could face a relatively minor misdemeanor charge such as aggravated unlicensed operation 3rd degree (AUO) and be eligible for an assigned attorney. But the same client could face the risk of losing custody of their child in an Article 10 [child protective case] and not be eligible for assigned counsel under a more stringent financial standard. Or there might be criminal charges against a client, as well as a custody or family offense petition arising out of the same facts. It only follows that representation should extend to all the interrelated cases.⁴¹

- iii. The correct standard for assignment of counsel: Several hearing participants stated that the term “indigent” is misleading, leading to the erroneous belief that counsel should be assigned only if the applicant is impoverished or destitute. Hearing participants reminded ILS that the correct standard is “inability to pay” for qualified counsel and effective representation, and that eligibility for assignment of counsel should not be confused with eligibility for other entitlements, such as public assistance.
- iv. Whether the mandated provider should screen for assigned counsel eligibility: The hearings revealed a divergence of opinion regarding whether each county’s primary provider of mandated representation should have the responsibility of screening for assigned counsel eligibility and making an initial recommendation to the court. Overall a majority of the hearing participants who addressed this issue recommended that screening for eligibility be undertaken by the mandated provider. ILS’ survey responses reveal that, in criminal matters, in a majority of counties, the provider of mandated representation currently has the screening and recommendation responsibility. Information gathered by ILS indicates that, in family court, financial eligibility determinations are more often made by judges or other judicial officers.⁴²

v. The need for an early screening process to determine qualification for assigned counsel to ensure access to counsel by family court litigants before their first appearance in court.

Numerous witnesses urged adoption of a prequalification process to ensure that parties can arrive at the first appearance after service is complete with a pre-determination of their financial eligibility for assigned counsel. Witnesses urged that potential litigants should be able to apply for assigned counsel services prior to preparing a petition or prior to a first appearance in response to a petition filed against them. For example, one witness recommended “the development of any system, electronic or otherwise, that encourages a faster and earlier determination of eligibility. Earlier determinations would allow for earlier assignments. Earlier assignments would allow for more time to prepare for court appearances, provide better consultations, and lead to more productive initial court appearances.”⁴³

- vi. The use of presumptions of eligibility: Most hearing participants who addressed this issue stated that use of eligibility presumptions is an effective means of efficiently screening for assigned counsel eligibility and that eligibility presumptions are already being used in their jurisdictions. The testimony is corroborated by the survey responses, which reveal that the most often-used presumptions are (a) income guidelines (as gauged by a multiple of the Federal Poverty Guidelines); (b) receipt of need-based public benefits; and (c) incarceration in a correctional facility or confinement to a mental health facility.

Idiomatic to family court representation, the 2019 hearings revealed significant support for a presumption of eligibility for parents facing the potential loss of their children to state custody as a result of allegations of child maltreatment (abuse or neglect), as recommended by the Unified Court System’s DiFiore Commission. Witnesses urged that, due to the complexity of these matters and the critical importance of preserving parents’ limited resources for the support and care for their children, eligibility determinations in child protective cases not be based solely upon a parent’s income. Indeed, ILS’ survey of judges and testimony of providers revealed that a presumption of eligibility in child protective cases is relatively common to ensure that parents have access to counsel at every critical stage of these proceedings.

- vii. Use of income guidelines in determining eligibility: The 2015 survey responses showed that a majority of jurisdictions used a 125% multiple of the Federal Poverty Guidelines (FPG) in assessing whether a person was eligible for an appointment of counsel, with some counties using a lower multiple and a greater number of counties using a higher multiple. The hearing participants who addressed this issue during the 2015 hearings tended to agree that it makes sense to use a multiple of the FPG for determining presumptive eligibility, though most stated that a 125% multiple of the FPG is too low. Recommendations for a higher multiple of the FPG ranged from 200% to 300%. Several participants expressed concern that using a higher multiple of the FPG could result in increased caseloads for providers of public criminal defense services.

⁴² See, e.g., Testimony of Nancy S. Erickson, ILS Family Court Eligibility Public Hearing (July 17, 2019) (explaining that, in New York City, financial eligibility decisions in family court “are generally made by the judge or other judicial officer asking the litigant questions about her income and assets; they are not handled by a separate office within the Family Court or another agency.”)

- viii. Consideration of third-party income: Perhaps the greatest source of controversy during the criminal court eligibility hearings was consideration of third-party income in determining eligibility for assignment of counsel, particularly the income of parents for minor defendants. Regarding family court matters, witnesses highlighted as particularly problematic the consideration of the income of spouses and other household members. The 2015 survey responses indicated that a majority of jurisdictions ask about and consider third-party income during the eligibility determination process. However, amongst those who gave an opinion during the 2015 hearings, most recommended against considering third-party income, identifying the problems with doing so and listing several reasons to support their recommendations.
- ix. Maintaining the confidentiality of applicants' financial information: Many hearing participants emphasized the importance of maintaining the confidentiality of the applicant's financial information. The reasons ranged from ensuring that the prosecuting attorney does not have access to information that could potentially implicate the applicant in a crime, to the fear that applicants, anticipating disclosure and the resultant embarrassment, might exaggerate their financial status, thereby diminishing their chances of being deemed eligible. Many hearing participants emphasized that it is impossible to maintain confidentiality when the eligibility screening is done in open court.
- x. Whether applicants are required to swear or attest under the penalty of perjury to the information provided: A majority of the applications ILS reviewed in 2015 required applicants to swear or certify to the accuracy of the information provided or attest to its accuracy under penalty of perjury. Several participants during the 2015 hearings stated that in their jurisdiction, this practice had been discontinued to ensure that people do not face possible punishment for having to apply for assigned counsel.
- xi. Whether "fraud" is a common problem, and thus applicants should be required to produce financial documents to verify the information on the application: A small number of hearing participants expressed the concern that it is common for applicants to misrepresent their financial situation to enhance the likelihood they will be assigned counsel, while a greater number stated that, in their experience, fraud is not common. Some participants noted that asking for financial documents to verify the financial information disclosed can delay the assignment of counsel, or worse, prevent applicants from completing the application process. Some hearing participants recommended that verifying financial documentation should be required only when there is incomplete financial information or a reason to believe that there is misinformation on the assigned counsel application.
- xii. Opportunity to request reconsideration or appeal a denial of eligibility for assignment of counsel: During the criminal court eligibility hearings, many providers stated that applicants could seek review of a denial for assignment of counsel by asking the provider to reconsider, by appealing to the judge, or by doing both. Most providers who addressed this issue stated that they notify applicants of this right to review or appeal at the time they inform applicants of the denial recommendation, though a small number said they only tell applicants of this right if the applicant complains. Additionally, while hearing participants discussed review of a provider's ineligibility recommendation, no participant said that there is a means by which to seek immediate review of a judicial ineligibility determination, though some identified a need for such a review opportunity.

Conversely, although in one county the ILS process for appeal developed for criminal cases was being applied in family court cases, by the time of the 2019 public hearings, virtually all providers of family court mandated representation who addressed the issue indicated that there was no process for applicants to appeal a denial of assigned counsel in family court cases. Survey responses from judges and providers indicated that applicants are rarely informed, either verbally or in writing, that they can request a review and/or appeal of a determination of ineligibility. In some cases where the applicant questions the provider's ineligibility determination, the applicant is typically advised that they can "make their case" to the judge, but that the judge will usually endorse the provider's decision.

- xiii. Use of County Law § 722-d: The 2015 public hearing testimony revealed that County Law §722-d orders were often issued "up front" simultaneously with the decision to assign counsel. Some hearing participants endorsed this, stating that County Law § 722-d can be used as a counter-balance to judges erring towards assigning counsel, in that providers can subsequently ask the judge to issue a repayment order if it is discovered that the defendant actually has the means to pay for counsel. Several other hearing participants, however, articulated concerns about the use of County Law § 722-d and described instances in which it is misused.

Consistent with (ii) above, ILS has revised the 2016 Criteria and Procedures for determining assigned counsel eligibility in criminal matters into one set of Standards for determining assigned counsel eligibility in family court and criminal matters.

The Scope of the Right to Assigned Counsel in Criminal Matters

It is critical to clarify the circumstances under which a person who cannot afford the costs of representation must be assigned counsel. In its 2001 report, the New York State Commission on Judicial Conduct noted that some judges are "unaware of their obligation to [assign counsel] in certain types of cases, such as city code violations or other non-traffic violations punishable by incarceration."⁴⁴ ILS' public hearings elicited testimony regarding failure to assign counsel, not because of lack of financial eligibility, but because the judge was not aware that the particular offense requires assignment of counsel for defendants who are unable to pay the costs of representation.

⁴⁴ New York State Commission on Judicial Conduct, 2001 ANNUAL REPORT, supra, at 34.

New York County Law article 18-B, which was enacted in 1965 shortly after the Court of Appeals' decision in People v. Witek, provides that defendants must be assigned counsel if they cannot pay for the costs of representation in any case involving a charge which authorizes a period of imprisonment, no matter the source of the law – be it a penal law provision, a public health law provision, or a local ordinance.⁴⁵ Only traffic infractions are exempted from this requirement.⁴⁶

Nevertheless, as a matter of constitutional law, there may be cases in which it is necessary to assign counsel to persons charged with traffic infractions. Following the 1965 enactment of County Law § 722-a, the United States Supreme Court decided two cases that extended the right to counsel articulated in Gideon v. Wainwright. In Argersinger v. Hamlin, decided in 1972, the Court held that assignment of counsel is required in any case, no matter the classification of the charged offense, “that actually leads to imprisonment even for a brief period.”⁴⁷ In 2002, in Alabama v. Shelton, the Court held that a “suspended sentence that may ‘end up in the actual deprivation of a person’s liberty’ may not be imposed unless the defendant was accorded ‘the guiding hand of counsel’ in the prosecution for the crime charged.”⁴⁸

As a result of Argersinger and Shelton, a person who is convicted of a traffic infraction cannot be sentenced to jail or a revocable sentence if that person was not provided an opportunity to apply for assignment of counsel. New York courts have recognized this and have held that, County Law § 722-a notwithstanding, in cases involving traffic infractions, counsel should be assigned if the court has not precluded the possibility of imposing a sentence of incarceration.⁴⁹

⁴⁵ See County Law §§ 722, 722-a; see also People v. Van Florcke, 120 Misc.2d 273 (App Term, 2d Dept 1983) (“Although defendant was sentenced to a conditional discharge, she was charged with a violation for which a 15-day period of incarceration is authorized by statute. Thus, it was incumbent upon the court to advise defendant that, if eligible, she would be entitled to assigned counsel” [internal citations omitted]).

Hamlin* (supra) even in traffic infraction cases, if there is a possibility of a sentence of imprisonment which is not waived by the Justice, the Defendant would be entitled to assigned counsel. . . .”); People v. Weinstock, 80 Misc.2d 510 (App Term, 2d Dept 1974) (same); People v. Forbes, 191 Misc.2d 573, 574-575 (White Plains City Ct, 2002) (holding that although there is no statutory right to counsel for traffic infractions, “if a defendant is subject to possible imprisonment, he or she must be advised of their right to counsel and to have counsel assigned where the defendant is financially unable to obtain same.”). See also Village, Town and District Courts in New York (Thomson Reuters), § 7.24 (advising magistrates and judges that in traffic infraction cases “counsel should still be assigned to indigent defendants if the court is considering a sentence of incarceration. . . . This is in all parties’ best interests, including the prosecution’s: an assignment may permit a conviction and sentence to survive a subsequent constitutional challenge on appeal.”).

The Scope of the Right to Assigned Counsel in Family Matters

In family related matters, the right to assigned counsel is articulated in Family Court Act §§ 261, 262, and 1120, and in Surrogate’s Court Procedure Act § 407. The right to assigned counsel of parents and others in a parent-like relationship to a child (“legally responsible persons”) is grounded in constitutional principles of due process and equal protection. In 1972, in the case of In re Ella B., which involved allegations of child neglect, the New York State Court of Appeals ruled that “an indigent parent, faced with the loss of a child's society, as well as the possibility of criminal charges is entitled to the assistance of counsel.”⁵⁰ Emphasizing the constitutional right of parents to the care and custody of their children, the Court concluded that “it is fundamentally unfair, and a denial of due process of law for the state to seek removal of the child from an indigent parent without according that parent the right to the assistance of court-appointed and compensated counsel.”⁵¹ Moreover, the Court declared, failure to provide the parent with a lawyer would constitute not only a violation of due process but, “in light of the express statutory provision for legal representation for those who can afford it, a denial of equal protection of the laws as well.”⁵²

Building on those fundamental principles, in 1975, the New York State Legislature acknowledged a constitutional right to assigned counsel in a range of family law proceedings in which persons may face “the infringements of fundamental interests and rights, including the loss of a child's society and the possibility of criminal charges.”⁵³ Currently, the parental right to assigned counsel extends to certain delineated persons in cases brought in Family Court and Surrogate’s Court involving child custody and visitation; child protective (abuse/neglect); foster care placement and review; termination of parental rights; destitute child; adoption; paternity; family offense (domestic violence); as well as to any person charged with contempt of court for violation of a prior court order (including willful violation of a child support order) and persons “in any other proceeding in which the judge concludes that “such assignment of counsel is mandated by the constitution of the State of New York or of the United States.”⁵⁴

STANDARDS FOR DETERMINING ASSIGNED COUNSEL ELIGIBILITY

- I. An applicant shall be eligible for assignment of counsel when the applicant’s current available resources are insufficient to pay for a qualified attorney, release on bond, the expenses necessary for effective representation, and the reasonable living expenses of the applicant and any dependents.
 - A. Whether an applicant is eligible for assignment of counsel shall be determined in accordance with the Standards set forth below.
 - B. Counsel shall be assigned unless the applicant is conclusively ineligible.

- II. To streamline the eligibility determination process, there shall be presumptions of eligibility. A presumption of eligibility is rebuttable only where there is compelling evidence that the applicant has the financial resources sufficient to pay for a qualified attorney and the other expenses necessary for effective representation.
 - A. Applicants are presumptively eligible for assignment of counsel if their net income is at or below 250% of the Federal Poverty Guidelines.
 - B. Applicants who are incarcerated, detained, or confined to a mental health institution shall be presumed eligible for assignment of counsel.
 - C. Applicants who are currently receiving, or have recently been deemed eligible pending receipt of, need-based public assistance, including but not limited to Family Assistance (TANF), Safety Net Assistance (SNA), Supplemental Nutrition Assistance (SNAP), Supplemental Security Income (SSI)/New York State Supplemental Program (SSP), Medicaid, or Public Housing assistance, shall be deemed presumptively eligible for assignment of counsel.
 - D. Applicants who have, within the past six months, been deemed eligible for assignment of counsel in another case in that jurisdiction or another jurisdiction shall be presumed eligible. Appellate courts shall assign appellate counsel to appellants who were deemed eligible for assigned counsel by their trial court.

- III. Counsel shall be assigned at the first court appearance or be provided immediately following the request for counsel, whichever is earlier. Eligibility determinations shall be done in a timely fashion so that representation by counsel is not delayed.

- A. Counsel shall be provided for applicants whenever they have not obtained counsel prior to a proceeding which may result in their detention or whenever there is an unavoidable delay in the eligibility determination, subject to judicial approval once the court proceeding has begun.
 - B. Where a petition or pre-petition request has been filed under Family Court Act Article 10 for an order for immediate removal of a child or temporary order of protection, a person who is a parent or legally responsible person, as defined by law, shall be entitled to immediate representation by counsel. In accordance with this entitlement, counsel shall also be provided for parents in child welfare proceedings during a child protective agency investigation and sufficiently in advance of their first court appearance, consistent with (A) above. As with subsection (A), this provision of counsel may be subject to judicial review once a court proceeding is commenced.

- IV. Ability to post bond shall not be sufficient, standing alone, to deny eligibility for assignment of counsel.

- V. The resources of a third party shall not be considered available to the applicant unless the third party expressly states a present intention to pay for counsel, the applicant gives informed consent to this arrangement, and the arrangement does not interfere with the representation of the applicant or jeopardize the confidentiality of the attorney-client relationship.
 - A. The resources of a spouse shall not be considered available to the applicant, subject to the above exception.
 - B. The resources of a parent shall not be considered as available to minor applicants, subject to the above exception.

- VI. Non-liquid assets shall not be considered unless such assets have demonstrable monetary value and are readily convertible to cash without impairing applicants' ability to provide for the reasonable living expenses of themselves and their dependents.
 - A. Ownership of a vehicle shall not be considered where such vehicle is necessary for basic life activities.
 - B. An applicant's primary residence shall not be considered unless the fair market value of the home is significant, there is substantial equity in the home, and the applicant is able to access the equity in a time frame sufficient to retain private counsel promptly.

- VII. Any income from receipt of child support or need-based public assistance shall not be considered as available to applicants in determining eligibility for assignment of counsel.
- VIII. Debts and other financial obligations, including the obligation to provide reasonable living expenses of the applicant and his or her dependents, shall be considered in determining eligibility for assignment of counsel.
- IX. Eligibility determinations shall take into account the actual cost of retaining a private attorney in the relevant jurisdiction for the type of family court proceeding or category of crime charged.
- X. These Standards shall be applied uniformly, consistently, and with transparency.
- XI. Courts have the ultimate authority to determine eligibility but may delegate the responsibility for screening and making an eligibility recommendation.
- A. Entities responsible for screening and making a recommendation should be independent and conflict-free.
- B. Where there is no entity that is independent and conflict-free, courts may delegate the screening responsibility to the provider of mandated representation.
- XII. The confidentiality of all information applicants provide during the eligibility determination process shall be preserved.
- A. The eligibility screening process, whether done by another entity or the court, shall be done in a confidential setting and not in open court.
- B. Any entity involved in screening shall not make any information disclosed by applicants available to the public or other entities (except the court).
- C. Any documentation submitted to the court shall be submitted ex parte and shall be ordered sealed from public view.
- XIII. The eligibility determination process shall not be unduly burdensome or onerous.

- A. Applicants shall not be required to attest under penalty of perjury to the truth of the information provided as part of the eligibility determination process.
 - B. Applicants shall not be denied assignment of counsel for minor or inadvertent errors in the information disclosed during the eligibility determination process.
 - C. Applicants shall not be required to produce unduly burdensome documentation to verify the financial information provided; nor shall they be denied assignment of counsel solely for the failure to produce documentation where they have demonstrated a good faith effort to produce requested documentation.
 - D. Applicants shall not be required to demonstrate that they were unable to retain private counsel to be deemed eligible for assignment of counsel.
- XIV. The determination that applicants are ineligible for assignment of counsel shall be in writing and shall explain the reasons for the ineligibility determination. Applicants shall be provided an opportunity to request reconsideration of this determination or appeal it, or both.
- A. Screening entities shall promptly inform applicants of their eligibility recommendation. If their recommendation is that the applicant be denied assignment of counsel, they shall provide the reason for the denial in writing along with written notice that the applicant can ask the screening entity to reconsider or can appeal to the court, or both.
 - B. If a court determines that an applicant is ineligible for assignment of counsel, the court shall inform the applicant of this decision in writing with an explanation as to the reason for the denial. The court shall also entertain an applicant's request to reconsider a decision that the applicant is ineligible for assignment of counsel.
- XV. A determination that a person is eligible for assignment of counsel may be re-examined only in accordance with County Law §722-d, which shall only be used after an assignment of counsel has been made, and only if prompted by assigned counsel as therein provided. Counsel shall not be assigned contingent upon a requirement that the person make partial payments to the provider of mandated representation or to the county.

XVI. Procedure regarding data maintenance

- A. Data shall be maintained regarding the:
- i) number of applicants who apply for assignment of counsel;
 - ii) number of applicants found eligible;
 - iii) number of applicants found ineligible and the reasons for the ineligibility determination;
 - iv) number of reconsiderations and appeals requested;
 - v) results of these reconsiderations and appeals;
 - vi) number of reports made pursuant to County Law § 722-d regarding the assignment of counsel; and
 - vii) number of orders issued for partial payment or termination of the assignment of counsel under County Law § 722-d.
- B. To ensure the confidentiality of information submitted during the eligibility determination process, the data shall be made available in aggregate form only, meaning that no individual applicant can be identified in the data itself.

STANDARDS FOR DETERMINING ASSIGNED COUNSEL ELIGIBILITY: WITH COMMENTARY

The purpose of the Standards is to ensure equitable, efficient, and fair implementation of the statutory and constitutionally guaranteed right to counsel in certain criminal and family court proceedings⁵⁵ pursuant to New York County Law Article 18-B. These Standards govern decisions or recommendations made by any entity involved in the screening process regarding the ultimate determination of whether a person is entitled to the assignment of counsel.

Unless otherwise specified, these Standards apply to determinations of financial eligibility for representation of persons pursuant to article 18-B of the County Law. To promote the implementation of these Standards, ILS has created an Application for Assignment of Counsel under County Law § 722-a. This form, with instructions, is included in Appendix D.

- I. An applicant shall be eligible for assignment of counsel when the applicant’s current available resources are insufficient to pay for a qualified attorney, release on bond, the expenses necessary for effective representation, and the reasonable living expenses of the applicant and any dependents.
 - A. Whether an applicant is eligible for assignment of counsel shall be determined in accordance with the standards set forth below.
 - B. Counsel shall be assigned unless the applicant is conclusively ineligible.

Commentary:

For nearly four decades, New York courts have recognized that, under County Law § 722, financial inability to afford counsel is “not synonymous with destitution or a total absence of means.”⁵⁶ Indeed, as the American Bar Association explains, “[n]o state uses only ‘indigency’ as ⁵⁵ Gideon v. Wainwright, 332 U.S. 335 (1963); People v. Witek, 15 N.Y. 2d 392 (1965); Matter of Ella B., 30 N.Y.2d 352 (1972).

the basis for providing counsel. This test is rejected because it confuses the question of the right to be provided counsel with issues about eligibility for public welfare assistance and suggests a rigid standard for every defendant without regard to the cost of obtaining legal services for a particular case.”⁵⁷

This Standard recognizes that the right to assigned counsel includes not only having a qualified attorney, but also the resources necessary for effective representation. These resources may include investigative services, experts, social work assistance, evidence testing, sentencing advocacy, parenting capacity assessments, and the costs associated with advising the person on and mitigating significant enmeshed consequences of a conviction or of a family court finding or disposition.⁵⁸ counsel should be whether persons are ‘financially unable to obtain adequate representation without substantial hardship’); National Study Commission on Defense Services/NLADA Guidelines for Legal Defense Systems in the United States (1976) (hereinafter, “1976 NLADA Guidelines for Legal Defense Systems in the United States”), Section 1.5 (“Effective representation should be provided to anyone who is unable, without substantial hardship to himself or his dependents, to obtain such representation”). Notably, this standard for assignment of counsel is nearly identical to the federal standard. See United States Judicial Conference, Guide to Judiciary Policy, Vol. 7-Defender Services, Part A: Guidelines for Administering the CJA and Related Statutes, Ch. 2, § 210.40.30(a) (hereinafter, “CJA Guidelines”).

While those defendants who are ‘too poor to hire a lawyer’ are typically referred to as ‘indigent,’ courts have never required that defendants be wholly without means before they are eligible for assigned counsel.”).

⁵⁸ See 1977 Third Department Memo and Guidelines, supra, at 1 (“The key test for determining eligibility is whether or not the defendant, at the time need is determined, is financially unable to provide for the full payment of adequate counsel and all other necessary expenses of representation.”); see also County Law § 722 (dictating that “[e]ach plan [for representation under Article 18-B] shall also provide for investigative, expert and other services necessary for an adequate defense.”); 1976 NLADA Guidelines for Legal Defense Systems in the United States, supra, Section 1.5(b) (“The cost of representation includes investigation, expert testimony, and any other costs which may be related to providing effective representation.”) (Black Letter summary available at http://www.nlada.net/sites/default/files/nsc_guidelinesforlegaldefensesystems_1976.pdf); National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws, Model Public Defender Act (1970), Section 1 Definitions (“‘expenses,’ when used with reference to representation under this Act, includes the expenses of investigation, other preparation, and trial”) (available at http://www.nlada.org/Defender/Defender_Standards/Model_Public_Defender_Act#4). During the public hearings, Hon. David Steinberg detailed this issue: “So I have a concern, these are the eligibility requirements that when you make – when the providers are making the decision, whoever is going to make the decision, about how that person, not only is going to afford counsel, but in some instances are going to have to afford an investigator, they’re going to have to afford a consultant, they’re going to have to afford possibly a transcript, or even going to have to afford as basic hire someone to go out and serve process to get their witnesses into court to have that subpoena served. And so when we’re talking about eligibility and what it’s going to cost to hire a lawyer, let’s not forget about the cost that cases need to be investigated.” Testimony of Hon. David Steinberg, Town Justice, Hyde Park, 9th Judicial District public hearing transcript, pp. 58-59, available at: <https://www.ils.ny.gov/content/eligibility-public-hearings>.

A determination that an applicant is able to afford counsel should be made only after the funds needed to pay bond have been subtracted from any calculation of available resources.⁵⁹ An applicant should not have to choose between paying the costs of bail and paying for the costs of a defense. See Standard IV.

Nor should applicants have to choose between retaining private counsel and providing basic life necessities for themselves and their dependents. Applicants should not have to risk having their lives de-stabilized (i.e., losing a home, a car needed for employment, and the ability to pay for food, clothing and utilities) to pay the costs of representation. In this regard, this Standard honors the mandate set forth in the Hurrell-Harring Settlement that the criteria and procedures used for assigned counsel eligibility require that “income needed to meet the reasonable living expenses of the applicant and any dependent minors within his or her immediate family, or dependent parent or spouse, . . . not be considered available for purposes of determining eligibility.”⁶⁰

To fully honor an applicant’s right to assignment of counsel, counsel should be assigned unless the applicant is conclusively ineligible for assignment of counsel.⁶¹ This rule is consistent with the rules and procedures in other jurisdictions, including the federal government.⁶²

II. To streamline the eligibility determination process, there shall be presumptions of eligibility. A presumption of eligibility is rebuttable only where there is compelling evidence that the applicant has the financial resources sufficient to pay for a qualified attorney and the other expenses necessary for effective representation.

Commentary:

The use of presumptions of eligibility will obviate the need for a detailed, complex analysis, thereby making the eligibility determination process more efficient and less costly. As stated in the Brennan Center Guidelines: “In practice, it is not necessary to engage in a time-consuming eligibility assessment for each defendant, because there are shortcuts that jurisdictions can and should take.”⁶³ ILS’ surveys and public hearings revealed that many jurisdictions are already using eligibility presumptions and that in most instances, an applicant will be deemed eligible based on one of their oft-used presumptions.⁶⁴

The following presumptions of eligibility shall apply.

A. Applicants are presumptively eligible for assignment of counsel if their net income is at or below 250% of the Federal Poverty Guidelines.

Commentary:

Testimony both at the public hearings and in written submissions revealed that many counties are already relying on a multiple of the Federal Poverty Guidelines (“FPG”) as a method for determining financial eligibility for assignment of counsel.⁶⁵ Yet, it was also apparent from the testimony that often there was not sufficient justification for the particular multiple used. One hearing participant stated that he realized that using a low multiple of the FPG was confusing “indigency” with “the ability to afford competent counsel” and in employing such a standard, “we do ourselves a disservice.”⁶⁶ He explained:

The thing that changed my mind about the 125 [% of the FPG] . . . this document, the self sufficiency standard of New York State, this one is 2010, it's available online, and it is an eye-opener. . . . [I]f you take a look at this, not only does it contain the rationale for dealing with assignment of counsel in a different way than indigency, but it lists all of the counties, every one of them, and talks about the different standards of living and what is required in each of those counties. And that's why when I looked at this - - and I think page 91/92 has a summary of all 62 counties and what it costs to provide the necessities of life, so families at one, two, three level, you know, no matter how many members. I looked at that and I think Wyoming County was at about 232% of the poverty lines -- guidelines, and so I was conservative, I went to 200.⁶⁷

Similarly, Merble Reagon, the Executive Director of the Women’s Center for Education and Career Advancement, testified that the Self-Sufficiency Standard is a better reflection than the FPG of the income required to meet life’s basic necessities in a specific locality without relying on financial public assistance.⁶⁸ However, she also recognized that, “it doesn’t make sense to think of our 62 counties having different eligibility criteria; it’s just not practical in general. But doing the math that you just did and then doing the simulation to other counties, I think...that a multiple of the poverty measure could come closer than we are today in terms of those eligibility criteria.”⁶⁹ As a result, Ms. Reagon used the Self-Sufficiency Standard to support her recommendation of a multiple of 250% of the FPG.⁷⁰

Like the above-referenced speakers, ILS used the Self-Sufficiency Standard as a guide⁷¹ to conclude that a multiple of 250% of the FPG best captures the income necessary to meet life’s basic necessities in New York.⁷² Notably, in 2005, Hon. Joseph M. Lauria, then-Administrative ⁶⁸ Testimony of Merble Reagon, Executive Director, Women’s Center for Education and Career Advancement, 9th Judicial District public hearing transcript, pp. 68-69, available at: <https://www.ils.ny.gov/content/eligibility-public-hearings>, describing the Self-Sufficiency Standard and defining “reasonable living expenses” as “a family’s basic needs: [h]ousing, childcare, food, transportation, healthcare, taxes, including income taxes, payroll taxes, and sales taxes, as well as a ten percent of miscellaneous expenses, which we add, which includes household products, telephone, clothing, shoes, and other household expenses. There is no recreation, there is no entertainment, there is no savings, and no debt repayment in this budget. In other words, we’re talking about bare-bones budget, a no-frills budget with no extras.” See, e.g., Adkins v. E.I. DuPont de Nemours & Co. 335 U.S. 331, 339-40 (1948) (“We cannot agree with the court below that one must be absolutely destitute to enjoy the benefit of the statute. We think an affidavit is sufficient which states that one cannot because of his poverty ‘pay or give security for the costs . . . and still be able to provide’ himself and dependents ‘with the necessities of life.’ To say that no persons are entitled to the statute’s benefits until they have sworn to contribute to payment of costs, the last dollar they have or can get, and thus make themselves and their dependents wholly destitute, would be to construe the statute in a way that would throw its beneficiaries into the category of public charges. The public would not be profited if relieved of paying costs of a particular litigation only to have imposed on it the expense of supporting the person thereby made an object of public support. Nor does the result seem more desirable if the effect of this statutory interpretation is to force a litigant to abandon what may be a meritorious claim in order to spare himself complete destitution.”); see also CJA Guidelines, supra, Ch. 2, § 210.40.30(a)(1) (“A person is ‘financially unable to obtain counsel’ within the meaning of 18 U.S.C. § 3006A(b) if the person’s net financial resources and income are insufficient to obtain qualified counsel. In determining whether such insufficiency exists, consideration should be given to . . . the cost of providing the person and his dependents with the necessities of life.”).

⁷¹ ILS explored the possibility of using solely the Self-Sufficiency Standard to establish income-based eligibility presumptions for each county. However, in addition to the concern about the impracticality of divergent standards from county to county, the Self-Sufficiency Standard is not updated annually. The last report was issued in 2010, meaning it cannot currently be used as a measure for presumptive income eligibility purposes.

⁷² To achieve this, ILS compared the 2010 Self-Sufficiency Standard Report to the 2010 Federal Poverty Guidelines and calculated the multiple of the FPG that most closely matched the Self-Sufficiency income

Judge for the Family Court of the City of New York issued a memorandum addressed to “All Supervising Judges, Judges, Referees, Support Magistrates, Court Attorneys, and Clerks of Court.” In the memorandum, Judge Lauria outlined “guidelines for eligibility for assignment of counsel to adults in New York City Family Court.” Noting the “enormous” range of income levels being used among the courts, Judge Lauria declared:

To establish some uniformity, the following shall be eligible income levels. They are 250% of the federal (HHS) poverty guidelines. Of course, you retain the discretion to make [adjustments] based upon extraordinary expenses, or any other factors you deem appropriate.⁷³

Accordingly, any person whose net income is at or below 250% of the FPG is presumptively eligible for counsel. “Net income” means an individual’s wages, interest, dividends or other earnings after deductions for state, federal and local taxes, social security taxes, Medicare taxes, any union dues, retirement contributions or other withholdings - in other words, “take home pay.” Gross income shall not be used as it is not an accurate measure of one’s ability to pay for the costs of private counsel and still provide oneself and any dependents with the “necessities of life.”⁷⁴ data. See <http://www.selfsufficiencystandard.org/docs/New-York-State2010.pdf>; <http://aspe.hhs.gov/hhs-poverty-guidelines-remainder-2010>.

⁷³ Hon. Joseph M. Lauria, Uniform Criteria for Assignment of Counsel and Eligibility Form (March 1, 2005).

⁷⁴ See CJA Guidelines, § 210.40.30(a)(1), supra. It is also important to note that, in some areas of civil legal services, where there is no right to counsel, eligibility determinations are based on multiples of up to 200% of the FPG. See, e.g., written submission of Peter Racette, Deputy Director, Legal Aid Society of Northeastern New York, p. 2, available at: <https://www.ils.ny.gov/content/eligibility-public-hearings>, stating that LASNNY’s three major funders – LSC, IOLA and JCLS – use various multiples of the FPG, from a base of 125% up to 200%, when considering additional factors (depending on the funding stream) to dictate income eligibility. IOLA does not even have a 200% “cap” on consideration of income and household expenses, and it also requires providers to consider the actual cost of retaining private counsel in the matter. Id. Additionally, Mr. Racette noted that private “[r]etainers in felony cases or custody disputes are often many thousands of dollars and cannot be realistically afforded by many people even if their income is over 200% of poverty given routine household expenses.” Id. at 3. See generally Gross, John P., Too Poor to Hire a Lawyer but Not Indigent: How States Use the Federal Poverty Guidelines to Deprive Defendants of Their Sixth Amendment Right to Counsel, 70 Wash. & Lee L. Rev. 1173; see also, 1977 Third Department Memo and Guidelines, supra, p. 2 (“A person charged with a crime [or] otherwise entitled to assigned counsel, is eligible for assigned counsel when the value of his present net assets and his current net income are insufficient to enable him promptly to retain a qualified attorney, obtain release on bond and pay other expenses necessary to an adequate defense, while furnishing himself and his dependents with the necessities of life.”) (emphases added); Testimony of James T. Murphy, Legal Services of Central New York, 6th Judicial District public hearing transcript, pp. 52-53, available at: <https://www.ils.ny.gov/content/eligibility-public-hearings> (“First of all, we talked about eligibility guidelines this morning and percentages of poverty. No one has said whether they’re looking at net income or gross income in those calculations. The Third Department got it right in ’78 it ought to be net.”).

As stressed by Judge Lauria, the 250% multiple of the FPG should not be seen as a rigid cut-off for determining whether a person is unable to afford counsel and therefore eligible for assignment of counsel. Especially in Family Court proceedings, applicants whose income exceed 250% of the FPG should not automatically be deemed ineligible for assignment of counsel. Rather, the 250% multiple should be viewed as a baseline criterion when assessing presumptive eligibility.

B. Applicants who are incarcerated, detained, or who are confined to a mental health institution shall be presumed eligible for assignment of counsel.

Commentary:

During the public hearings, there was consensus amongst those who addressed the issue of presumptions that persons who are incarcerated, detained, or confined to a mental health institution should be presumed eligible for assignment of counsel, and in fact, many testified that in their jurisdiction, such persons are already presumed eligible.⁷⁵ Having a presumption of eligibility for those who are incarcerated, detained, or confined to a mental health institution is also consistent with the practice in other jurisdictions.⁷⁶

C. Applicants who are currently receiving, or have recently been deemed eligible pending receipt of, need-based public assistance, including but not limited to Family Assistance (TANF), Safety Net Assistance (SNA), Supplemental Nutrition Assistance (SNAP), Supplemental Security Income (SSI)/New York State Supplemental Program (SSP), Medicaid, or Public Housing assistance, shall be deemed presumptively eligible for assignment of counsel.

⁷⁵ See Determining Eligibility for Assignment of Counsel in New York: A Study of Current Criteria and Procedures and Recommendations for Improvement, § III, A.

⁷⁶ See Brennan Center Guidelines, supra at 22-23 (noting that states would save time and resources by establishing presumptions of eligibility for defendants who are incarcerated or confined to a mental health facility). Several states have established such presumptions of eligibility. See, e.g., Ohio Admin. Code, 120-1-03(B)(2), (3) (presumptions of eligibility for defendant confined to a mental health institution and for defendants confined to a state prison); Mass. Gen. Laws, Supreme Judicial Court Rule 3:10 (presumption of eligibility for persons in a mental health facility and persons in a correctional facility); Colorado Chief Justice Directive 04-04 (amended Nov. 2014) (dictating that defendants who are incarcerated are automatically eligible for appointment of counsel and need not complete the application); 2005 Washington Revised Code § 10.101.010(1)(b) (“‘Indigent’ means a person who, at any stage of a court proceeding, is . . . [i]nvoluntarily committed to a public mental health facility”); Nevada Supreme Court, In the Matter of the Review of Issues Concerning Representation of Indigent Defendants in Criminal and Juvenile Delinquency Cases, ADKT No. 411 (Jan. 4, 2008) (court rule establishing presumption of eligibility for defendants who are “currently serving a sentence in a correctional institution or [are] housed in a mental health facility”); Michigan Criminal Procedure 780.991, Sec. 11(3)(b) (presumption of assigned counsel eligibility for those “currently serving a sentence in a correctional institution or . . . [housed] in a mental health . . . facility”); Idaho Code § 19-854(2)(c) (same); Louisiana Rev. Stat. § 15.175(A)(1)(b) (same).

Commentary:

As with the foregoing presumption, ILS' research into current practices in New York revealed that many counties currently use presumptions of assigned counsel eligibility for applicants who receive need-based public assistance.⁷⁷ Such applicants have already undergone a thorough and comprehensive assessment of their financial situation and have been deemed unable to pay for reasonable life expenses without assistance. Conducting another assessment of their finances would require a needless expenditure of resources.⁷⁸ Moreover, common sense suggests that if a person needs government assistance to pay for basic life necessities, like food or housing, then the person lacks the resources needed to fund a competent defense. Finally, having a presumption of eligibility for applicants who are in receipt of need-based public assistance is consistent with that which is done in many other states.⁷⁹

D. Applicants who have, within the past six months, been deemed eligible for assignment of counsel in another case in that jurisdiction or another jurisdiction shall be presumed eligible. Appellate courts shall assign appellate counsel to appellants who were deemed eligible for assigned counsel by their trial court.

Commentary:

During the public hearings, many participants told stories of applicants who had been assigned counsel in one jurisdiction, but denied counsel in another jurisdiction when facing similar charges.⁸⁰ Though these stories were conveyed to illuminate the need for statewide eligibility

⁷⁸ The National Institute of Justice (NIJ) also recommends this presumption in its 1986 report because it will streamline the process. See NIJ, Containing the Costs of Indigent Defense Programs: Eligibility Screening and Cost Recovery Procedures (September 1986), at 69 (hereinafter, the “1986 NIJ Report”) (“The presumptive test regarding public assistance should be applied in each case since it appears that a large number of criminal defendants fall into this category.”).

⁷⁹ See Brennan Center Guidelines, supra, p. 22 (“Many jurisdictions already presume defendants to be eligible for free counsel when they receive certain need-based public benefits.”); see also National Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers, Redefining Indigence: Financial Eligibility Guidelines for Assigned Counsel, supra, at 15, 24-42 (noting that “some states find defendants who are already receiving certain needs-based federal benefits automatically eligible for assigned counsel” and identifying the following states as establishing automatic, or presumptions of, eligibility for defendants receiving certain types of public assistance: Alaska, Hawaii, Idaho, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Missouri, North Dakota, Ohio, Rhode Island, Virginia, and Wisconsin). Other states that presume assigned counsel eligibility for applicants who receive public assistance include: Washington (2005 Washington Revised Code § 10.101.010(1)(a)); Florida (Fla. Stat. Ann. § 27.52(2)(a)); Nevada (Nevada Supreme Court, In the Matter of the Review of Issues Concerning Representation of Indigent Defendants in Criminal and Juvenile Delinquency Cases, ADKT No. 411 (Jan. 4, 2008) (court rule)); Michigan (Michigan Criminal Procedure 780.991, Sec. 11(3)(b)); Idaho (Idaho Code § 19-854(2)(b)); Louisiana (Louisiana Rev. Stat. § 15.175(A)(1)(b)).

standards, they also highlight an opportunity to streamline the eligibility determination process through adoption of a common-sense presumption of eligibility for any applicant who has recently been deemed eligible for assignment of counsel in the same or another jurisdiction. For similar reasons, it also makes sense that appellate courts assign appellate counsel to applicants who were deemed eligible for assigned counsel by their trial court.⁸¹ Notably, Family Court Act § 1118 applies a presumption of eligibility for appellate assigned counsel based on a previous finding of eligibility for assigned counsel at the trial level.

With regard to the information needed to verify these foregoing presumptions, documentation should not be required to verify that a person is incarcerated, detained, or confined to a mental health institution, since this is self-evident. Nor should documentation be required to verify that an applicant has, within the past six months, been deemed eligible for assignment of counsel in another case, since that information can easily be verified through the provider of representation or the court in the other case. For the presumption regarding the receipt of need-based public assistance, the production of a public benefits card or an award letter shall constitute sufficient verification.

III. Counsel shall be assigned at the first court appearance or be provided immediately following the request for counsel, whichever is earlier. Eligibility determinations shall be done in a timely fashion so that representation by counsel is not delayed.

A. Counsel shall be provided for applicants whenever they have not obtained counsel prior to a proceeding which may result in their detention or whenever there is an unavoidable delay in the eligibility determination, subject to judicial approval once the court proceeding has begun.

B. Where a petition or pre-petition request has been filed under Family Court Act Article 10 for an order for immediate removal of a child or temporary order of protection, a person who is a parent or legally responsible person, as defined by law, shall be entitled to immediate representation by counsel. In accordance with this entitlement, counsel shall also be provided for parents in child welfare proceedings during a child protective agency investigation and sufficiently in advance of their first court appearance, consistent with (A) above. As with subsection (A), this provision of counsel may be subject to judicial review once a court proceeding is commenced.

Commentary:

In criminal cases, the right to counsel, which attaches at arraignment if not sooner, and lasts until the disposition of the case, now clearly encompasses the right to counsel at first appearance in New York.⁸² Often, the early stages of a criminal case are the most critical because it is then that, among other things, issues pertaining to the defendant’s pre-trial liberty are determined, evidence is collected or lost, and legal rights are preserved. More than twenty years ago, the New York State Defenders Association emphasized the importance of immediate assignment of counsel, stating as follows:

The necessity for prompt and accurate judicial determinations of eligibility for appointed counsel cannot be over-emphasized. . . . Effective representation of the accused, which includes the constitutional right to present a defense, compels the appointment of counsel at the earliest possible stage of the proceedings. Indeed, all professional standards for the provision of defense services recommend that counsel be provided as soon as feasible after custody begins, and in fact contemplate intervention of counsel even before the defendant’s first appearance before a judicial officer or the filing of formal charges.⁸³

It is critical that counsel be assigned not only at first appearance, but also sooner if a request for counsel is made.⁸⁴ Thus, for example, a determination as to a person’s eligibility for assignment of counsel should be made even prior to arraignment for a person who has been issued an appearance ticket and requests assignment of counsel prior to arraignment. Similarly, an eligibility determination should be made as soon as possible for a person who “reasonably believes that a process will commence that could result in a proceeding where representation is mandated.”⁸⁵ Thus, persons who learn that they are being investigated by law enforcement for their possible involvement in a crime should be screened for assigned counsel eligibility upon request, and an eligibility determination should be made immediately.⁸⁶

⁸³ New York State Defenders Association, Determining Eligibility for Appointed Counsel in New York State (1994 NYSDA report), supra, at. 4, citing ABA Standards for Criminal Justice: Providing Defense Services, 5-6.1 (1990); National Advisory Commission on Criminal Justice Standards and Goals, Courts, 13.1 and Commentary (1973); National Study Commission on Defense Services, 1.2-1.4 (1976); National Legal Aid and Defender Association Standards for Defender Services, II 2b, II 2e (1976); NLADA Standards for the Administration of Assigned Counsel Systems, 2.5 (1989). More recent standards have similarly stated that counsel must be assigned as soon as possible. See, e.g., ABA, Ten Principles of a Public Defense Delivery System (2002), Principle 3 (“Clients are screened for eligibility, and defense counsel is assigned and notified of appointment, as soon as feasible after clients’ arrest, detention, or request for counsel.”); NYSBA 2015 Revised Standards for Providing Mandated Representation (hereinafter, “NYSBA 2015 Revised Standards”), Standard B-1 (“Provision of counsel shall not be delayed while a person’s eligibility for mandated representation is being determined or verified.”); New York State Office of Indigent Legal Services, Standards and Criteria for the Provision of Mandated Representation in Cases Involving a Conflict of Interest (2012), Standard 5 (county programs for mandated representation must “[p]rovide representation for every eligible person at the earliest possible time and begin advocating for every client without delay, including while client eligibility is being determined . . .”).

In child welfare matters, legal representation for parents at all phases of their family’s interaction with the child welfare and family court systems is essential to the fair administration of justice. Moreover, most parents involved in child welfare proceedings can afford neither a qualified attorney nor the other expenses necessary for effective representation.⁸⁷ In its 2019 Interim Report to Chief Judge DiFiore, the Unified Court System’s Commission on Parental Legal Representation recommended that parents involved in child welfare proceedings be deemed presumptively eligible for assigned counsel representation.⁸⁸ In connection with its recommendation that child welfare involved parents be given assigned counsel during a child protective investigation and sufficiently in advance of the first court appearance, the Commission

emphasized that a rebuttable presumption of eligibility “is essential to better protect their right to meaningful representation” and “would make access to counsel simple and immediate.”⁸⁹

The Unified Court System’s Family Court Advisory and Rules Committee (FCARC) similarly pressed the importance of presumptive eligibility in its response to ILS’ 2019 Notice of Public Hearings on Financial Eligibility for Assignment in Family Matters. In the words of FCARC co-chair Hon. Michele Pirro Bailey:

[T]he determination of eligibility for assignment of counsel in Family Court has significant implications for access to justice and fundamental fairness. This is particularly true in Family Court Article 10 removal proceedings where the need for counsel is urgent and the lack thereof can have long-lasting consequences with respect to the disruption of the family, mental and emotional stress on children and parents, and upon the Court’s ability to address safety and risk concerns with options other than removal.⁹⁰

Family court practitioners also stressed the need for presumptive eligibility in child welfare proceedings. One witness stated that, “given the speed at which decisions regarding placement are made, there may not be time to complete, submit and evaluate applications for financial eligibility. Early involvement in the case goes hand-in-hand with presumptive eligibility.”⁹¹

Currently, in most jurisdictions, parents are not advised of their right to counsel, or that they have the right to an assignment of counsel if they cannot afford one, until after a neglect or abuse petition is filed with the court, despite the clear provisions in the Family Court Act requiring written notice “of the right to be represented by counsel and the procedures for those who are indigent to obtain counsel in proceedings brought pursuant to this article.”⁹² As a result, parents and persons legally responsible often make admissions, sign releases, and even consent to placement of their children in foster care or with third parties outside of the formal foster care system without having been properly advised of the consequences. Waiting until the first court appearance to advise parents of the right to counsel, “combined with the application process to determine financial eligibility, results in a multiple-week delay before counsel is able to meet with, and properly advise, the client.”⁹³

Nevertheless, responses by judges to ILS’ survey and testimony submitted to ILS by providers indicate that such a presumption is already being applied in some jurisdictions. Using a presumption of eligibility for child welfare matters “means that neither court staff nor attorneys need to use precious time on the first day a parent comes to court to engage in potentially burdensome and time-consuming assessments. Rather, they are able to focus on preparing for the first appearance, and the parent need not wait hours, days or weeks to receive representation.”⁹⁴ Statewide, uniform and consistent use of presumptive eligibility for assigned counsel in child welfare proceedings can be expected to “make access to counsel simple and immediate,” and “will ensure that child welfare involved parents receive representation without delay.”⁹⁵

When delay is unavoidable, counsel must be provisionally appointed until eligibility for assignment of counsel is determined. A majority of magistrates and providers who responded to ILS’ survey indicated that counsel is provisionally appointed pending a final decision regarding eligibility for assigned counsel. Still, a sizeable minority of magistrates and providers responded that there is no such process.⁹⁶ And during ILS’ public hearings, some witnesses spoke of a long and needless delay in the assignment of counsel, during which defendants and family court litigants, including respondents in child protective proceedings, had no access to counsel.⁹⁷

Courts and entities involved in the screening process must ensure that persons are not constructively denied the right to counsel because of a needless delay in the eligibility determination process or because of failure to provisionally appoint counsel when delay is unavoidable.

IV. Ability to post bond shall not be sufficient, standing alone, to deny eligibility for assignment of counsel.

Commentary:

The American Bar Association (ABA) has stated strongly and succinctly that “[c]ounsel should not be denied . . . because bond has been or can be posted.”⁹⁸ In the commentary accompanying this rule, the ABA explains that the “ability to post bond is rejected as a basis for denying counsel because it requires the accused to choose between receiving legal representation and the chance to be at liberty pending trial. Since a person’s freedom prior to trial often is essential to the preparation of an adequate defense, placing the defendant in this dilemma is arguably a denial of the effective assistance of counsel.”⁹⁹ Other professional standards agree that it is not a permissible practice to deny counsel to defendants based solely on the fact that they posted bail.¹⁰⁰

There are additional reasons to refrain from denying assignment of counsel solely because an applicant has posted bail. First, the bail could have been posted by someone other than the applicant, such as a friend, an employer, or a relative, and thus, does not reflect the applicant’s financial ability to retain private counsel.¹⁰¹ As fully discussed in Standard V, the right to counsel is a personal right, and the ability of a third party to post bail for the applicant should not be factored into an assessment of whether or not the applicant qualifies for assigned counsel.¹⁰² Second, applicants might be able to post bail, but only because they know that the funds will be returned. Permanent relinquishment of these funds to retain counsel might not be possible without jeopardizing their ability to provide reasonable living expenses for themselves or their dependents. Third, if applicants are required to choose between eligibility for assignment of counsel or posting bond, they may choose the former, and as a result languish in jail at the county’s expense, which is needlessly costly for taxpayers.¹⁰³ Finally, this Standard comports

V. The resources of a third party shall not be considered available to the applicant unless the third party expressly states a present intention to pay for counsel, the applicant gives informed consent to this arrangement, and the arrangement does not interfere with the representation of the applicant or jeopardize the confidentiality of the attorney-client relationship.

A. The resources of a spouse shall not be considered available to the applicant, subject to the above exception.

B. The resources of a parent shall not be considered as available to minor applicants, subject to the above exception.

Commentary:

The right to the assignment of counsel is an individual right that requires an individual eligibility assessment, and “[t]he accused’s assessment of his own financial ability to obtain competent representation should be given substantial weight.”¹⁰⁵

Fundamentally, the relationship between an attorney and his or her client is exclusive and premised on the concept that an attorney acts solely at the client’s request and advocates only on the client’s behalf.¹⁰⁶ A person must consult with his or her attorney to make crucial decisions at every stage of a case. Each decision can have far-reaching consequences for the client, including the potential loss of physical liberty or limits on the parent-child relationship, including the temporary or permanent loss of custody of a child. As such, the right is wholly individual, “and the assignment of counsel should not be dependent on the income or assets of anyone other than the [client].”¹⁰⁷

Considering a third party's assets as part of assigned counsel eligibility determinations creates inherent danger of conflict and unconstitutional delay.¹⁰⁸ Denying eligibility for assignment of counsel based upon a third party's resources is tantamount to requiring this third party to pay for private counsel. Payment by a third party can compromise an attorney's ethical obligation under the New York State Rules of Professional Conduct.¹⁰⁹ Rule 1.8 requires attorneys not only to obtain “informed consent” from a client before accepting payment from a third party, but also to ensure that there will be “no interference with the lawyer’s independent professional judgment or with the client-lawyer relationship” while maintaining “the client’s confidential information.”¹¹⁰ Denying eligibility for assignment of counsel based on a third party’s resources can also result in a litigant not obtaining counsel at all if, after analysis, an attorney concludes that third-party payment cannot be accepted.

Additionally, requiring a third party to pay for an attorney can denigrate a litigant’s interests or create an imbalanced relationship dynamic that influences the person on key decisions, or both. The obvious example is an accused person who wishes to go to trial but who is relying on a third party to pay the legal bills. This accused person might be pressured by that third party to avoid the increased costs of trial and may be induced to plead guilty notwithstanding the consequences. During ILS’ public hearings, providers repeatedly cited cases involving accusations between two household members, e.g., domestic violence allegations, where it is potentially dangerous to assess the same household member’s finances in order to determine the accused person’s eligibility for counsel.¹¹¹ Clearly it is a conflict when a person who is a possible complainant, opposing party, or witness is required to pay the legal fees of an accused person.

These principles are equally applicable in family law cases. As the New York State Defenders Association noted in its written submission to ILS during the 2019 eligibility hearings:

“The constitutional and statutory guarantee of counsel is a personal right. Therefore, the income of household members, and spouses (regardless of whether they live in the same household), should not be considered available to the person applying for assigned counsel in a family court case when determining eligibility. This has long been NYSDA’s position (see NYSDA’s 2015 Statement). This standard is especially relevant in Family Court matters where many cases involve relatives, as well as other household members on opposing sides of a case, or co-respondents with divergent interests. (For example, a petitioner and a respondent in a family offense proceeding, or co-respondents in an Article 10 proceeding, client, from one other than the client unless: (1) the client gives informed consent; (2) there is no interference with the lawyer’s independent professional judgment or with the client-lawyer relationship; and (3) the client’s confidential information is protected as required by Rule 1.6.”).

¹¹¹ See, e.g., Nevins written submission, supra, p. 5 (“Indeed in domestic violence cases, this could mean asking the victim of the offense to be responsible for the defendant’s fees.”). Further, in the civil legal services arena, this danger of conflict is recognized in the Code of Federal Regulations (“C.F.R.”), which dictates, “[n]otwithstanding any other provision of this part, or other provision of the recipient’s financial eligibility policies, every recipient shall specify as part of its financial eligibility policies that in assessing the income or assets of an applicant who is a victim of domestic violence, the recipient shall consider only the assets and income of the applicant and members of the applicant’s household other than those of the alleged perpetrator of the domestic violence and shall not include any assets held by the alleged perpetrator of the domestic violence, jointly held by the applicant with the alleged perpetrator of the domestic violence, or assets jointly held by any member of the applicant’s household with the alleged perpetrator of the domestic violence.” C.F.R. § 1611.3(e).

Echoing NYSDA’s concerns, the Volunteer Lawyers Project of Onondaga County, Inc. urged that “[t]he way the Assigned Counsel Program in Onondaga County assesses eligibility in criminal cases should be the same for Family Court . . . household income should not need to be reported especially if household members have no obligation or intent to cover the cost of legal services.”¹¹³

The New York State Defenders Association noted in its 1994 report that “[t]he personal nature of the right to court-appointed counsel is equally applicable to minor defendants as to their adult counterparts.”¹¹⁴ Yet, the surveys and public hearings revealed that many counties are currently considering parental income in the case of minors based on the analysis that parents have a legal responsibility to provide certain life necessities to a child.¹¹⁵ While it is true that generally, absent emancipation, parents have such a legal responsibility up to the age of 21,¹¹⁶ in a criminal case where current New York State law treats some individuals as young as 13 years old as adults,¹¹⁷ this responsibility does not extend to paying for defense counsel. With regard to minors, unlike in Family Court where the parents are often parties to the litigation, a criminal case is personal to the individual charged and no other party has the same vested interest, nor is there jurisdiction over any other party.¹¹⁸ A minor who is accused of a crime faces the same

¹¹⁸ See People v. Clemson, 149 Misc. 2d 868 (Justice Ct, Wayne County 1991) (distinguishing between the line of family court cases holding parents responsible for minor’s legal fees and finding the criminal court does not have jurisdiction to order the parents to pay a minor defendant’s legal fees); see also People v. Kearns, 189 Misc. 2d 283 (Sup. Ct, Queens County 2001) (same). Though both Clemson and Kearns ultimately determined that the minor defendant’s parental income should be considered, both courts focused on the personal nature of a minor defendant’s right to counsel and the fact that there is no jurisdiction to force a non-charged parent to pay a minor defendant’s legal fees. As a result, it is clear from the courts’ analysis that any parental support obligations should not be litigated in criminal court at the expense of a minor defendant. As NYSDA noted on page 7 of its July 8, 2015 memo, entitled Assigned Counsel Eligibility of Minors in Criminal Court: No Parental Liability, “[t]he issue of whether the payment of counsel fees on behalf of a minor constitutes a support obligation is in all accounts a question of fact dependent on the circumstances of the family and the parent-child relationship and cannot consequences as an adult, including the loss of liberty. When a parent is required to pay irrespective of the minor’s personal wishes, the representation of the minor runs the risk of being subordinated to the parent’s will.¹¹⁹ Consequently, the risks are the same as in any other third-party scenario if appointment of counsel for a minor is postponed or not achieved because of a need for parental income analysis.¹²⁰

Should a third party state that he or she will help the person pay for counsel promptly, and the person agrees to accept such an offer,¹²¹ that third party’s income and resources can be considered an available resource for the purposes of the eligibility determination so long as it be cursorily resolved against a parent by a criminal court in the course of a determination of the minor accused’s right to the assignment of counsel.”

¹¹⁹ In one of the public hearings, Edward Nowak, President of the New York State Defenders Association and former Monroe County Public Defender, testified that it was all too common in Monroe County and across the State to encounter parents who are unwilling to assist their child or want to use the criminal justice system to teach their child a lesson (see 7th Judicial District public hearing transcript, at 24-25, available at: <https://www.ils.ny.gov/content/eligibility-public-hearings>). Mr. Nowak also described parents who refused to return phone calls and refused to pay for their child’s defense, thereby creating delays in appointment of counsel. Unfortunately, Mr. Nowak’s experiences are not exceptional. ILS staff heard from other providers that these types of scenarios occur frequently. Mark Williams, Cattaraugus County Public Defender, testified: “If I had a dollar for every time I heard a parent say, let him sit in jail for a few days, or let her sit in jail for a few days, I’d probably be a rich man and I wouldn’t have any need to be a public defender in Cattaraugus County, I could retire.” (8th Judicial District public hearing transcript, p. 19, available at: <https://www.ils.ny.gov/content/eligibility-public-hearings>). And, in her testimony, Essex County Assistant Public Defender Molly Hann stated: “As for applicants 21 and under, we never consider parental or grandparent or, you know, custodial income because they are our client, that minor is our client. And so just because their parents might be a millionaire with several houses throughout the country or the world or, you know, have the ability to hire private counsel, if the parents choose not to pay for their child’s mistakes and want them to learn a lesson, if – we only look at that child’s ability.” (4th Judicial District public hearing transcript, at 104, available at: <https://www.ils.ny.gov/content/eligibility-public-hearings>).

¹²⁰ The 1977 Third Department Memo and Guidelines, supra, allows for the consideration of parental income of minors (and other family income for all defendants), but cautions care, stating, at p. 3, “HOWEVER, THE SIXTH AMENDMENT RIGHT TO COUNSEL IS PERSONAL, THEREFORE, ASSIGNMENT OF COUNSEL CANNOT BE DENIED IF OTHER FAMILY MEMBERS REFUSE TO CONTRIBUTE TOWARD THE COST OF COUNSEL.” (emphasis in original).

¹²¹ See Rules of Professional Conduct [22 NYCRR 1200.0] Rule 1.8(f)(1), supra.

does not cause unwarranted delay in appointment of counsel.¹²² However, absent such a statement, the analysis should focus solely on the person’s individual ability to pay.¹²³

VI. Non-liquid assets shall not be considered unless such assets have demonstrable monetary value and are readily convertible to cash without impairing applicants’ ability to provide for the reasonable living expenses of themselves and their dependents.

A. Ownership of a vehicle shall not be considered where such vehicle is necessary for basic life activities.

B. An applicant’s primary residence shall not be considered unless the fair market value of the home is significant, there is substantial equity in the home, and the applicant is able to access the equity in a time frame sufficient to retain private counsel promptly.

Commentary:

It is well recognized that non-liquid assets should not be considered in determining whether an applicant is eligible for assigned counsel¹²⁴ because such assets typically cannot be converted to ¹²² Similarly, the CJA Guidelines § 210.40.50 require that “[t]he initial determination of eligibility should be made without regard to the financial ability of the person’s family unless the family indicates willingness and financial ability to retain counsel promptly. At or following the appointment of counsel, the judicial officer may inquire into the financial situation of the person’s spouse (or parents, if the person is a juvenile) and if such spouse or parents indicate their willingness to pay all or part of the costs of counsel, the judicial officer may direct deposit or reimbursement.”

¹²³ Again we note that the ABA Standards for Criminal Justice: Providing Defense Services (“1992 ABA Standards”), supra, echo this point in Standard 5-7.1, stating that “[c]ounsel should not be denied . . . because friends or relatives have resources to retain counsel.”

¹²⁴ People v. King, 41 Misc.3d 1237(A)(Bethlehem Justice Ct, Albany County 2013) (“Only available liquid assets should be considered, and non-liquid assets, such as a home used as a primary residence, or an automobile necessary to sustain employment, and reasonable household furnishings should be excluded from the net asset inquiry.”); see also 2015 NYSDA Statement, supra at 5 (“Only non-liquid assets that have demonstrable monetary value and marketability or are otherwise convertible to cash may be considered, and only if converting such assets to cash would not create substantial hardship for the prospective client or persons dependent upon the prospective client.”); Nevins written submission, supra, at 5 (“If the question is whether a person can actually pay a lawyer for a matter as time-sensitive as a pending criminal case, the fact that she owns a home or a car that she needs to get to work may be patently irrelevant.”); Brennan Center Guidelines, supra at 15 (“However, just as jurisdictions should consider unavailable all revenue used for the basic expenses of daily living or to maintain employment, jurisdictions should consider unavailable all assets used for such purposes, such as a defendant’s primary residence, household furnishings, and clothing, and the car a defendant uses to get to work”); 1976 NLADA Guidelines, supra, Section 1.5(a) (“Liquid assets include cash in hand, stocks and bonds, bank accounts and any other property which can be readily converted to cash. The person’s home, car, household furnishings, clothing and any property declared exempt from attachment or execution by law, should not be considered in determining eligibility.”) (Black Letter “Summary of Recommendations,” available at www.nlada.org/DMS/Documents/998925963.238/blackletter.doc). Other states similarly cash quickly enough to retain private counsel. For instance, an asset may have value, but no substantial equity against which a loan can be secured. And even if the asset does have substantial equity, if it cannot be readily converted to cash, then the applicant does not have the present ability to retain counsel – a criterion for determining eligibility for appointed counsel.¹²⁵

Ownership of a vehicle may not be considered if the vehicle is used for basic life necessities, such as employment, educational, or medical purposes.¹²⁶ This requirement is in accord with the Hurrell-Harring Settlement.¹²⁷ Nor shall ownership in a home normally be considered if the home is the applicant’s primary residence. An applicant’s primary residence may be considered only if the fair market value of the home is significant, there is substantial equity in the home, (for example, the equity is more than 50% of the home’s fair market value), and the applicant is able to access the equity in a time frame sufficient to retain private counsel promptly.¹²⁸ Moreover, with regard to home ownership of applicants involved in domestic violence situations, “victims may be the co-owner of a marital home, but due to relatively low income and the spouse’s financial abuse and non-payment of the mortgage, the home may be at risk of or in foreclosure proceedings, and thus not a financial asset to the litigant.”¹²⁹

VII. Any income from receipt of child support or need-based public assistance shall not be considered as available to applicants in determining eligibility for assignment of counsel.

If by their nature an accused’s assets cannot be timely reduced to cash and cash is required, the ‘present’ financial inability to obtain counsel which defines indigence for Sixth Amendment purposes appears.”).

¹²⁷ See Hurrell-Harring Settlement, § VI(B)(6) (requiring that “ownership of an automobile should not be considered sufficient, standing alone, to deny eligibility where the automobile is necessary for the applicant to maintain his or her employment.”).

Commentary:

By law, child support receipts are intended for the well-being of the child, not the parent.¹³⁰ Generally, the law precludes the consideration of need-based public assistance in making other assessments regarding government benefits, or in determining a person's taxable income.¹³¹ Thus, the receipt of child support and any income that is derived from a need-based source of public assistance, described in Standard II, C, should not be considered income for purposes of assessing financial eligibility.

VIII. Debts and other financial obligations, including the obligation to provide reasonable living expenses for the applicant and his or her dependents, shall be considered in determining eligibility for assignment of counsel.

Commentary:

Determining whether an applicant has the current available resources to pay for qualified counsel and the other expenses of representation requires consideration of the applicant's liabilities as well as resources.¹³² Such debts and financial obligations include the following: fixed household expenses, such as rent or mortgage, utility payments, and food; employment or educational-related expenses, such as child or dependent care, transportation, clothing, supplies, equipment or automobile insurance payments; child support paid to another; minimum monthly credit card payments; educational loan payments; health insurance payments; unreimbursed medical payments; and non-medical expenses associated with age or disability. assignment of counsel because of failure to consider these liabilities can have immediate adverse consequences, such as jeopardizing applicants' ability to pay reasonable living expenses and maintaining the stability of themselves and their dependents. It can also lead to serious long-term consequences, such as bankruptcy. Additionally, as set forth in the Hurrell-Harring Settlement, the income needed to meet the reasonable living expenses of the applicant and his or her dependents is a liability which must not be considered as available to the applicant in determining the applicant's financial eligibility for assignment of counsel.¹³³

Litigants in family law cases often face particular financial constraints that affect their ability to afford effective representation. For example, in testimony submitted to the DiFiore Commission, Sanctuary for Families asserted that: "In cases of domestic violence, abusers often limit the economic opportunities of their victims, such as by prohibiting them from working or advancing their education. Having eligibility standards which account for a variety of financial constraints is crucial as domestic violence survivors often have modest incomes, very limited assets or significant debt."¹³⁴

IX. Eligibility determinations shall take into account the actual cost of retaining a private attorney in the relevant jurisdiction for the type of family law case or category of crime charged.

Commentary:

In assessing an applicant's ability to retain private counsel, it is critical that the actual costs of representation for the particular type of family law case or criminal charge and in the particular jurisdiction be considered.¹³⁵ As set forth in the Hurrell-Harring Settlement, "eligibility

¹³⁴ Written submission to DiFiore Commission of Sanctuary for Families. Similarly, Lois Schwaeber, The Safe Center Long Island wrote: "The question of what resources may be considered is much more complex, especially if the litigant is a victim of financial abuse, as many of my clients are. The litigant may own the home but not have cash resources available and while she may be a joint owner, the house and/or mortgage payments may be in arrears or foreclosure. The guidelines should consider what other debts she has and whether she has access to family funds."

¹³⁵ See People v. King, supra, 41 Misc.3d 1237(A), *2 (Bethlehem Justice Ct, Albany County 2013) (noting that in making eligibility determinations, courts should give substantial consideration to, among other things, "the complexity of the case, and the cost of privately retained counsel in the jurisdiction where the representation will occur."); see also NLADA Guidelines for Legal Defense Systems in the United States ("1976 NLADA Guidelines"), supra, Section 1.5 ("If the person's liquid assets are not sufficient to cover the anticipated costs of representation as indicated by the prevailing fees charged by competent counsel in the area, the person should be considered eligible for publicly provided representation."); NIJ, Containing the Costs of Indigent Defense Programs: Eligibility Screening and Cost Recovery Procedures ("1986 NIJ Report"), supra at 23, noting that "[o]btaining private defense counsel can be a costly proposition. Even defendants whose assets exceed their liabilities could experience hardships due to the cost of hiring an attorney." In this report, the NIJ examined studies done in both Massachusetts and Los Angeles, California, and reported that the Massachusetts study found that the cost of criminal private representation "varied not only by type of case (juvenile, misdemeanor, felony, or appeal), but also by the seriousness of the charges within each category; thus, both variables determinations shall take into account the actual cost of retaining a private attorney in the relevant jurisdiction for the category of crime charged.”¹³⁶ This requires consideration of the following: the seriousness of the particular charge, the anticipated complexity of the given case, the need for other necessary expenses of representation (such as investigative and expert services), and the actual cost for retaining an attorney to represent the applicant in the particular jurisdiction. After all, an applicant with limited resources might be able to afford the cost of representation on a simple violation, but might be unable to pay the costs of a competent defense of a more complex case, especially when the cost of such other related services, such as case investigation and expert services, are factored in.

Special considerations related to the costs of retaining counsel in family law matters also exist. Witnesses quoted hourly rates for family law cases ranging from $300 to $590 in upstate counties,¹³⁷ and a 2018 report on legal trends found that in New York City the average hourly rate charged by a private attorney was $368.¹³⁸ Furthermore, as one witness explained to ILS, retaining an attorney for family law cases imposes a substantial financial hardship on litigants and their children:

Privately retaining an attorney for family court proceedings is a complicated process because family court proceedings are inherently complicated. Family court proceedings are unpredictable. There is no way to guarantee the amount of time or the number of court appearances needed to complete a family court proceeding. Attorneys, who may face challenges from the Court if they seek to be relieved after submitting their notice of appearance, justifiably want to ensure they will be paid for the work they perform. Attorneys, hired for family court proceedings, will typically charge a rate per hour or per court appearance. Additionally, those attorneys will typically charge retainer fees costing thousands of dollars.¹³⁹

In child welfare cases, “it is important to consider all that goes into ensuring quality representation,” including, in addition to rigorous investigation and defense of the allegations: court advocacy at conferences and meetings; developing individualized visiting arrangements for parents and their children who have been removed from their custody; developing individualized service plans; and identifying out-of-home placement arrangements that support a child’s should be factored into the eligibility decision.” Id. at 23-24. Following its analysis, Los Angeles decided to include, in its assessments for eligibility determinations, the question of “whether or not a competent private attorney would be interested in representing the defendant in his or her present economic circumstances.” Id. at 24. As a result, NIJ ultimately recommends that “eligibility screeners . . . take into consideration in making indigency determinations the prevailing rates in their jurisdiction for retaining private counsel in different types of cases.” Id. at 70.

connection to his or her parents and community.¹⁴⁰ Other costs that may be associated with assessing the actual cost of obtaining an attorney and effective representation in a child welfare case include: costs of defending against a concurrent criminal court case; costs associated with the applicant’s removal from the primary home pursuant to the issuance of a temporary order of protection; costs associated with consulting and retaining expert witnesses; and costs associated with recommended or mandated services.¹⁴¹

X. These Standards shall be applied uniformly, consistently, and with transparency.

Commentary:

During ILS’ public hearings, nearly every person who addressed this issue emphasized the need for uniform, written, comprehensive, yet easily understandable eligibility standards.¹⁴² These sentiments mirror the Hurrell-Harring Settlement, which requires that “eligibility determinations shall be made pursuant to written criteria.”¹⁴³ Uniform standards are necessary to ensure that individuals are not denied their right to assigned counsel because of the indiscriminate application and consideration of improper criteria, to enable predictability for counties and mandated providers in the forecasting of their future resources and budgetary needs,¹⁴⁴ to ensure that similarly-situated individuals are treated in a similar manner, and to guard against personal prejudices and implicit bias informing decisions about assigned counsel eligibility.¹⁴⁵ As set forth in the New York State Defenders Association’s written submission:

The purpose of these criteria and procedures is to ensure equitable, efficient, and fair implementation across the state of the right to counsel as guaranteed by constitutional and statutory provisions. . . . These guidelines can eliminate the substantial amount of idiosyncratic, divergent, and improper practices that are depriving individuals of their right to appointed counsel.¹⁴⁶

The promulgation and implementation of written standards will diminish arbitrary eligibility determinations. If the same eligibility factors are applied by all involved in the eligibility determination process, regardless of their location, the chance that a person deemed eligible in one jurisdiction will be deemed ineligible in another similar jurisdiction under the same set of circumstances will be greatly reduced. The fair treatment of all applicants for assigned counsel can revive public trust in the justice system.¹⁴⁷

Transparency means that potential applicants know how their application for assigned counsel will be processed and decided.¹⁴⁸ Thus, it is imperative that these eligibility determination standards be widely disseminated – for example, posted in courthouses, in the offices of mandated providers, and on the websites of courts and mandated providers.

XI. Courts have the ultimate authority to determine eligibility but may delegate the responsibility for screening and making an eligibility recommendation.

A. Entities responsible for screening and making a recommendation should be independent and conflict-free.

B. Where there is no entity that is independent and conflict-free, courts may delegate the screening responsibility to the provider of mandated representation.

Commentary:

In New York State, courts have the ultimate authority for determining eligibility for assigned counsel.¹⁴⁹ Courts may, and often do, assign to other entities the responsibility of screening for eligibility and making a recommendation as to the applicant’s eligibility for assignment of counsel.¹⁵⁰ Regardless of the entity to which these responsibilities are assigned, it is ideal that the eligibility screening process be conducted by an entity that is independent and free from political influence or financial pressures – a prerequisite to ensuring fair outcomes and protecting the rights of those unable to afford counsel. Having an independent screening entity ensures that eligibility determinations are not motivated by impermissible factors, such as pressure to minimize costs to the county or to manage caseloads. For that reason, in its 2008 Guidelines, the Brennan Center emphasizes the importance of ensuring that those involved in the eligibility screening process “be free of any conflict of interest or other ethics violation.”¹⁵¹

Under New York’s county-based system, there currently is no entity involved in screening for assigned counsel eligibility that does not have a conflict of interest. All entities that screen – whether it is a provider of mandated representation or a third-party screening entity – are currently funded by the counties, and thus have an inherent incentive to control costs by diminishing the number of applicants deemed eligible. This reality emerged during the public hearings, during which several county providers acknowledged the pressure imposed upon them to apply rigid screening criteria so as to reduce the number of applicants deemed eligible for assigned counsel. As one provider stated, her county’s assigned counsel committee “bases our performance as an office on how low we can keep the 18-b line, which is just a horrible thing. It doesn’t take into account our representation of these clients who just desperately need our help. All that they care about is how much the county part is going to be at the end of the year, and we work very hard to try to keep that line low. . . . [U]nfortunately, the county considers it to be a bad thing if the assigned counsel line, which we have absolutely no control over, exceeds our budget for the year.”¹⁵² And in at least one other county, judges were reportedly asked by the provider to refrain from overriding the provider’s eligibility denials “because those overrides increased [the provider’s] caseloads.”¹⁵³ Other providers acknowledged that being involved in the eligibility determination process can create a potential for applicants to question the providers’ loyalty.¹⁵⁴

On the other hand, the public hearings revealed compelling advantages of delegating the screening and initial recommendation responsibility to providers of mandated representation.¹⁵⁵ The following are some of the advantages identified:

- Because the providers are now regularly appearing at arraignments, when providers are responsible for eligibility determinations, a decision often can be made quickly, thereby facilitating the early entry of counsel and diminishing the possibility of gaps in representation.
- The provider is in the best position to maintain the confidentiality of information obtained during the eligibility determination process.¹⁵⁶ This is important because prosecuting attorneys or other entities have sought to obtain, and to use against applicants, financial information gathered during the eligibility screening.
- The information gathered during the eligibility determination process is the same information that defenders need to advocate for pre-trial release or bail applications. Having the provider responsible for screening is more respectful of the applicant because it reduces the number of people to whom the applicant must disclose the same personal information.
- Perhaps most importantly, the provider of mandated representation is the only entity that is professionally and ethically obligated to align its interests with those who are in need of public representation.¹⁵⁷

¹⁵⁵ See generally Determining Eligibility for Assignment of Counsel in New York: A Study of Current Criteria and Procedures and Recommendations for Improvement, § II, A.

¹⁵⁷ The 1992 ABA Standards (supra) recognize this concept in the commentary to Standard 5-7.3, p. 96, stating, as follows: “The lawyer for the accused, who has a continuing and personal interest in the client’s welfare, is likely to conduct eligibility interviews in a dignified manner.” Similarly, during his hearing testimony, Edward Nowak, who served as Monroe County Public Defender for thirty years and currently is President of the New York State Defenders Association, was asked about his strongly-held position that the providers of mandated representation should be charged with the responsibility of screening for eligibility. He acknowledged the reality that everyone involved in a county-based system has some conflict, but then stated: “Then I would just ask, which entity in the entire State of New York . . . cares about the rights of th[e] defendant more than the defender? I submit to you, there are none. Everyone else has some type of a conflicting position and there is no one that looks out for the rights of a defendant who is charged with a crime more than the defense attorney. That is why they are the ones [who should screen for eligibility].” (7th Judicial District public hearing transcript, at 29).

For that reason, ILS acknowledges that where there exists no screening entity that is independent and conflict-free, it makes sense for courts to delegate to the providers of mandated representation the responsibility for the initial eligibility determination screening and recommendation.¹⁵⁸ We further emphasize that law enforcement entities, including probation departments and child protective services agencies, must not be involved in the eligibility determination process.¹⁵⁹

Finally, it bears emphasizing that the inherent existence of conflict elevates the importance of adherence to these standards. Strict adherence will diminish the influence of outside pressures to control costs, thereby ensuring the integrity of the eligibility determination process.

XII. The confidentiality of all information applicants provide during the eligibility determination process shall be preserved.

- A. The eligibility screening process, whether done by another entity or the court, shall be done in a confidential setting and not in open court.
- B. Any entity involved in screening shall not make any information disclosed by applicants available to the public or other entities (except the court).
- C. Any documentation submitted to the court shall be submitted ex parte and shall be ordered sealed from public view.

¹⁵⁹ The federal system explicitly prohibits law enforcement from being involved in the assigned counsel eligibility screening process and from seeking information disclosed by the defendant during this process. See CJA Guidelines, § 210.40.20(e) (“Employees of law enforcement agencies or U.S. attorney offices should not participate in the completion of the [assigned counsel application form] or seek to obtain information from a person requesting the appointment of counsel.”). During one of the ILS public hearings, a speaker succinctly explained why it is inappropriate to have probation involved in the screening process, stating as follows: “I have to stress this; probation has no business doing screening. Probation is law enforcement, probation is part of the entity which is prosecuting the individual. . . . The police department has no business, probation [has] no business.” Testimony of Kent Moston, Attorney-in-Chief, Legal Aid Society of Nassau County, 10th Judicial District public hearing transcript, at 101, available at: <https://www.ils.ny.gov/content/eligibility-public-hearings>.

Commentary:

Maintaining the confidentiality of information disclosed during the eligibility determination process is necessary to protect applicants' constitutional, statutory, and privacy rights.¹⁶⁰ If applicants believe that the information they disclose could be sought and used against them, "as in the case of domestic violence matters (where familial relationship is an element of the crime), tax offenses (where income may be a question of fact), or even drug possession cases (where ownership of a vehicle is at issue),"¹⁶¹ they could be forced to choose between exercising their constitutional right to counsel and their right against self-incrimination - a choice no person should ever have to make.¹⁶² Nor should applicants have to choose between the right to privacy and the right to counsel.¹⁶³ Indeed, fearing public disclosure, applicants might choose privacy over the assignment of counsel and withhold embarrassing information about household expenses, or, for an applicant who is being abused or controlled by their spouse, an honest explanation as to why she lacks access to assets she holds jointly with her spouse.¹⁶⁴

Additionally, "[s]hielding the information can improve the accuracy and efficiency of the screening process, and ensure that eligible people are provided with counsel."¹⁶⁵ When applicants know that their information will be kept confidential, they are more likely to be forthcoming, thereby facilitating an accurate eligibility determination.

For these reasons, entities involved in screening for eligibility shall take steps to ensure the confidentiality of information disclosed during the screening process,¹⁶⁶ a requirement of the

and not to those who can.¹⁶⁹ Yet, the reality is that most people facing criminal charges or litigants in family court who apply for publicly funded counsel are too poor to pay the costs of effective representation.¹⁷⁰ “Therefore, the goal of a sensible screening process should be to screen in most defendants accurately and efficiently, while screening out the few individuals who are not qualified, all without spending too much money.”¹⁷¹

Eligibility determination procedures should not be premised on the assumption that applicants will provide false or misleading information to be deemed eligible for assignment of counsel. This assumption is belied by research, which shows that the vast majority of applicants in criminal cases provide accurate information during the eligibility determination process. The few defendants who misstate their finances tend to overstate their resources, diminishing rather than enhancing their chances of being found eligible for assignment of counsel.¹⁷² For that and other reasons, it is not necessary to require applicants to affirm under penalty of perjury that the information they provide is accurate.¹⁷³ Doing so does not enhance the accuracy of the information provided, but instead chills the exercise of applicants’ right to assigned counsel. Nor should applicants be penalized for minor or inadvertent errors in reporting their financial resources. As was stated during ILS’ public hearings: “If defendants fear prosecution based on unintentional or minor errors, they may opt to forego the screening and fail to avail themselves

of their right to counsel.”¹⁷⁴ In the end, “[o]verzealous enforcement is unlikely to result in significant cost savings for jurisdictions.”¹⁷⁵

Similarly, applicants should not be required to provide voluminous or hard-to-obtain documentation to verify the financial information they disclose, as doing so also has a chilling effect on the exercise of the right to assignment of counsel.¹⁷⁶ Processes that are needlessly burdensome and time-consuming increase the administrative costs of the eligibility determination process and delay the appointment of counsel, but do not result in significant cost-savings to the county or state. For that reason, in a 1986 report, the National Institute of Justice advised that the financial information disclosed during the eligibility determination process be verified only when there is missing information or legitimate grounds to believe that the applicant has provided inaccurate information.¹⁷⁷ Of course, as is stated in the Commentary to Standard XV, when the assignment of counsel is based on intentional misrepresentation, the court has the inherent authority to re-visit the assigned counsel eligibility determination.

Finally, eligibility for assignment of counsel should not be contingent upon applicants having to provide evidence that they have repeatedly sought and failed to retain counsel because of their limited financial resources.¹⁷⁸

- A. Screening entities shall promptly inform applicants of their eligibility recommendation. If their recommendation is that the applicant be denied assignment of counsel, they shall provide the reason for the denial in writing along with written notice that the applicant can ask the screening entity to reconsider or can appeal to the court, or both.

- B. If a court determines that an applicant is ineligible for assignment of counsel, the court shall inform the applicant of this decision in writing with an explanation as to the reason for the denial. The court shall also entertain an applicant’s request to reconsider a decision that the applicant is ineligible for assignment of counsel.

Commentary:

Written notice and explanation of a denial of assignment of counsel, as well as the right to ask that a denial be reconsidered or appealed, are fundamental to the fairness and transparency of the eligibility determination process. Written denials ensure clear communication and provide a record of all ineligibility determinations and the reasons for these determinations. Written decisions may also enhance an applicant’s acceptance of the denial, particularly where it is clear that the denial is consistent with these Standards. Reconsideration and appeal processes provide a mechanism by which to review eligibility denials to ensure that such denial is consistent with these Standards.

By reconsideration, we mean an informal process by which an applicant can ask a screening entity to reconsider a recommendation that assignment of counsel be denied. This can be done in writing or orally, in person or by telephone. This reconsideration process is accessible to applicants because it is not needlessly formal. It offers applicants an opportunity to provide the screening entity with more information, including a better explanation of their financial situation or better documentation. During the ILS public hearings, many providers involved in screening for eligibility testified that they often reconsider eligibility recommendations if asked to do so, and it is not unusual for them to change their minds about recommending that an applicant be deemed ineligible for assignment of counsel. However, while providers are willing to reconsider, not all providers are notifying applicants in writing that they will reconsider denial recommendations; nor are all providers regularly informing applicants in writing of the reasons they are recommending that assigned counsel be denied.

Similarly, providers involved in eligibility determination screenings told us that applicants often appeal such recommendations to the court, and that it is not unusual for trial courts to disagree with what the provider has recommended. However, as with reconsiderations, not all providers are regularly notifying applicants that they can appeal a screening entity’s recommendation to the court.¹⁷⁹

¹⁷⁹ For an overview of current practices amongst providers, see Determining Eligibility for Assignment of Counsel in New York: A Study of Current Criteria and Procedures and Recommendations for Improvement, § II, F.

Accordingly, any entity involved in screening for assigned counsel eligibility shall provide applicants with written notice of a determination to recommend that eligibility be denied. The notice shall contain reasons for the recommendation. A Sample Notice of Eligibility Recommendation is included in Appendix E. Entities involved in screening shall also notify the applicant that she or he has the right to request that the screening entity reconsider the denial recommendation, or to appeal the denial recommendation to the court. Applicants shall be told that they can do both – ask for reconsideration, and if still denied, then appeal to the court – or they can appeal directly to the court without first asking the screening entity to reconsider. This notice shall use language that is easy to understand and shall be provided in the applicant’s primary language. A Sample Notice of Right to Seek Review is included in Appendix F. Reconsideration requests and appeals shall be resolved in a timely fashion (no more than 48 hours) to guard against delay in the assignment of counsel. If delay in resolving the request for reconsideration or appeal is unavoidable, counsel shall be appointed provisionally in accordance with Standard III.

A decision by a court that an applicant is not eligible for assignment of counsel shall also be provided to the applicant in writing with an explanation as to the reason for the denial. As previously stated, written decisions ensure clear communication; they are also likely to enhance the applicant’s acceptance of the denial, thereby diminishing the likelihood that the applicant will seek to challenge the denial.¹⁸⁰ This written decision shall also be in the applicant’s primary language. Sample Notice of Judge’s Ineligibility Decision is included in Appendix G.

Currently, there is no mechanism by which an applicant may seek to immediately appeal a judge’s decision denying eligibility for assignment of counsel.¹⁸¹ National standards, however, state that a process for appealing a judicial denial of eligibility for assignment of counsel should be made available.¹⁸² Accordingly, ILS urges that consideration be given to enacting regulations or legislation that would authorize an administrative appeal process or an interlocutory appeal of a judge’s decision denying eligibility for assignment of counsel.

XV. A determination that a person is eligible for assignment of counsel may be re-examined only in accordance with County Law §722-d, which shall only be used after an assignment of counsel has been made, and only if prompted by assigned counsel as therein provided. Counsel shall not be assigned contingent upon a ¹⁸⁰ Oral decisions do not have similar benefits because they do not provide an applicant the same opportunity to review the decision and discern if it accords with these criteria and procedures.

¹⁸¹ If convicted, the person can raise the issue of the judge’s denial of assignment of counsel on an appeal of the underlying conviction.

¹⁸² See 1976 NLADA Guidelines for Legal Defense Systems in the United States, supra, Guideline 1.6 (“A decision of ineligibility which is affirmed by a judge should be reviewable by an expedited interlocutory appeal.”) (Black Letter “Summary of Recommendations,” available at www.nlada.org/DMS/Documents/998925963.238/blackletter.doc). See also Determining Eligibility for Appointed Counsel in New York State (“1994 NYSDA report”), supra, p. 19 (“Provision of an appellate review process conducted by the judiciary is consistent with the inherent responsibility of the courts to insure proper appointment of counsel.”); Vt. Stat. Ann. § 5236(c) (providing that a trial court’s determination that a defendant is not financially eligible for assignment of counsel may be appealed to a single justice of Vermont’s Supreme Court).

requirement that the person make partial payments to the provider of mandated representation or to the county.

Commentary:

As stated in the commentary to Standard XIII, it is important to maintain the integrity of the eligibility determination process to ensure that counsel is being assigned to those who cannot afford the costs of effective representation, and not to those who can. Thus, there may be times when a change in the financial circumstances of the person receiving mandated representation warrants a re-examination of the continued assignment of counsel. However, the eligibility determination should be re-examined only when there is concrete evidence that the financial circumstances of the person receiving mandated representation have substantially changed such that the person is now able to afford the costs of qualified counsel and the expenses necessary for effective representation.

New York County Law § 722-d sets forth a very limited process for the re-examination of eligibility for assignment of counsel. County Law § 722-d applies only after a person¹⁸³ has been deemed eligible for assigned counsel, and not as part of the initial appointment process. Once counsel is appointed, if a mandated provider learns that the person is “financially able to obtain counsel or make partial payments for representation,” the mandated provider may report this fact to the court,¹⁸⁴ and the court may then terminate the assignment of counsel or authorize partial payment to the mandated provider. The court can do so only after conducting a detailed inquiry into the person’s financial situation to determine if he or she can pay all or part of the costs of representation.¹⁸⁵ Only after a finding that the person is able to afford counsel may the court terminate the assignment or order reimbursement to the mandated provider.

Notably, under County Law § 722-d, the authority to order partial payment exists only after a person has been determined eligible for assigned counsel and only after the assigned attorney notifies the court that the person may be able to pay for counsel. The law does not authorize courts to sua sponte terminate the assignment of counsel or order persons to make partial ¹⁸³ While we recognize that the language of County Law § 722-d speaks in terms of “defendant”, we note also that there are some court decisions in which the statute has been interpreted as applying to Family Law matters. See, e.g., Matter of Cherrez v. Lazo, 102 A.D.3d 782 (2nd Dept. 2013) (citing County Law § 722-d and affirming the Family Court’s order denying the father’s objection to the Support Magistrate’s determination that he had the financial ability to pay the entire cost of the representation provided to him by assigned counsel). See also Abadi v. Abadi, 48 Misc.3d 380, 387 (Sup. Ct., Kings County 2015); Cohen v. Cohen, 33 Misc.3d 448 (Sup. Ct., Nassau County 2011).

payments for their representation.¹⁸⁶ Moreover, County Law § 722-d does not authorize courts to assign counsel contingent upon the person paying the partial costs of representation.¹⁸⁷ Thus, counsel should not be assigned simultaneously with the issuance of an order under County Law § 722-d requiring the person to partially pay the costs of representation.¹⁸⁸

County Law § 722-d does not constrain judges from acting upon learning that an applicant has intentionally misrepresented his or her financial situation to obtain free counsel. When the assignment of counsel is based on intentional misrepresentation, the court has the inherent authority to re-visit the assigned counsel eligibility determination.

XVI. Procedure regarding data maintenance

A. Data shall be maintained regarding the:

- i) number of applicants who apply for assignment of counsel;
- ii) number of applicants found eligible;
- iii) number of applicants found ineligible and the reasons for the ineligibility determination;
- iv) number of reconsiderations and appeals requested;
- v) results of these reconsiderations and appeals;
- vi) number of reports made pursuant to County Law § 722-d regarding the assignment of counsel; and
- vii) number of orders issued for partial payment or termination of the assignment of counsel under County Law § 722-d.

B. To ensure the confidentiality of information submitted during the eligibility determination process, the data shall be made available in aggregate form only, meaning that no individual applicant can be identified in the data itself.

Commentary:

As stated in the commentary to Standard X, adherence to these standards will ensure equitable, efficient, and fair implementation of the right to counsel across New York and will enhance public trust in the integrity of the eligibility screening process. But no standards, criteria, or procedures are self-executing. It will be critical to ensure not only that these standards are widely disseminated and made available, but also that their implementation is monitored. Therefore, courts and screening entities must maintain relevant data regarding the eligibility determination process. Pursuant to Executive Law § 832(3)(b), this data shall be made available to ILS upon request. Importantly, to ensure the confidentiality of all information applicants disclose, the data maintained shall be de-identified, meaning all information that could identify a particular applicant shall be redacted. Additionally, all submissions of data to ILS pursuant to the Executive Law need only be in aggregated form, further guaranteeing against disclosure of private or individually identifiable information.

ILS recognizes that the responsibility to collect this data may impose a burden upon some courts and screening entities. The existence and extent of this burden may vary from county to county, depending on existing systems, infrastructure, and resources. ILS will work with the Office of Court Administration, courts, indigent defense providers, and other screening entities in support of their efforts to collect the data required by this procedure.

APPENDIX B

Public Hearings on Eligibility for Assignment of Counsel

NOTICE: On March 11, 2015, a settlement agreement reached between the State of New York and a plaintiff class represented by the New York Civil Liberties Union in Hurrell-Harring et al. v. State of New York was approved by the Albany County Supreme Court. The agreement vests the New York State Office of Indigent Legal Services (ILS) with the responsibility of developing and issuing criteria and procedures to guide courts in counties located outside of New York City in determining whether a person is unable to afford counsel and eligible for mandated representation.

PURPOSE: ILS will conduct a series of public hearings to solicit the views of county officials, judges, institutional providers of representation, assigned counsel, current and former indigent legal services clients and other individuals, programs, organizations and stakeholders interested in assisting ILS in establishing criteria and procedures to guide courts when determining eligibility for mandated legal representation in criminal and family court proceedings. Interested participants should provide testimony regarding current and/or recommended guidelines, policies and practices relating to the following topics:

- The criteria for determining whether an individual is eligible for court appointed counsel which may include, but not be limited to, the ability to post bond, the actual cost of retaining private counsel, the income needed to meet reasonable living expenses of the applicant and any dependents or dependent parent or spouse, the severity of the case, the ownership of an automobile that may or may not be necessary for the applicant to maintain his/her employment, the receipt of public benefits, home or other property and non-liquid assets, and income including income and assets of family members, debts and financial obligations, employment and housing status, including residence in a correctional or mental health facility, the use of fixed poverty guidelines and any other criteria that may be included for consideration.
- The process and/or method for disseminating information regarding the criteria for determining eligibility.
- The process of reviewing, appealing and/or reconsidering eligibility determinations.
- The advantages and disadvantages of proposing uniform and comprehensive criteria and/or guidelines to determine eligibility.
- The need to preserve confidentiality of information submitted to determine eligibility.
- Any related social and economic benefits and/or consequences related to the impact of standardizing eligibility determinations.

SUBMISSIONS AND TESTIMONY: The New York State Office of Indigent Legal Services Panel will consider both oral testimony and written submissions. Persons interested in presenting oral testimony or making a written submission, or both, are asked to follow the procedures and deadlines described below.

Submission of Written Testimony: Any person wishing to submit written testimony only must do so by August 26, 2015. Written testimony should be submitted to ILS at the contact information below.

Requests to Provide Oral Testimony: Because of the limited number of hearings scheduled, the Panel will accept requests to present oral testimony in advance, and will then notify individuals of the proposed date, time and duration scheduled for their testimony. If you are interested in testifying at a hearing, please forward your request via email to publichearings@ils.ny.gov no later than 7 days in advance of the hearing at which you propose to testify. Proposed testimony should be no more than 10 minutes in length.

If requesting an invitation to provide oral testimony, please provide the following information:

1. Identify yourself and your affiliation if applicable (and if you are requesting an invitation for someone else to testify, that individual's name and affiliation);
2. Attach either a prepared written statement or a brief description of the topics you wish to address at the hearing; and
3. Indicate at which of the hearing(s) the testimony is proposed to be given.

If requesting to give oral testimony, please indicate if you will need special accommodations (e.g. Americans with Disabilities Act or language access assistance) in order to testify.

NAME, ADDRESS AND AGENCY CONTACT: All written submissions and requests to testify should be forwarded to the New York State Office of Indigent Legal Services at the following addresses.

NOTICE OF PUBLIC HEARING

NEW YORK STATE OFFICE OF INDIGENT LEGAL SERVICES Public Hearings on Financial Eligibility for Assignment of Counsel in Family Matters

NOTICE: Executive Law § 832(3)(c) requires the NYS Office of Indigent Legal Services (“ILS”) to issue criteria and procedures for determining whether a person is financially unable to hire a lawyer and therefore eligible for publicly-funded legal representation (“assigned counsel”) in certain family law matters as set forth in Family Court Act § 262 and Surrogate’s Court Procedures Act § 407.

ILS will conduct four (4) public hearings to solicit the views and experiences of institutional and individual providers of assigned counsel representation, current and former clients of assigned counsel providers, county officials, judges, and others interested in assisting ILS in fulfilling this statutory obligation.

Testimony (written and/or oral) is requested regarding current and/or recommended guidelines, policies, and practices relating to the following topics:

- The criteria for deciding whether an individual is eligible for assignment of counsel, such as: the actual cost of hiring private counsel; type and complexity of the case; income needed to meet basic life necessities of the applicant and any dependents; ownership of a vehicle necessary for basic life activities; home ownership, and ownership of other property and non-liquid assets, including the current valuation thereof; income and assets of family or other household members; income from child support or need-based public assistance; debts and financial obligations; employment status; applicant’s housing status, including a person’s residency in a correctional or mental health facility; the use of presumptions of eligibility, including a rebuttable presumption of eligibility for parents in child welfare (Family Court Act Article 10) cases; the use of fixed income guidelines (“poverty guidelines”); and any other criteria or factors that may be considered.
- The process of applying for assigned counsel, including the use of technology for prequalification and processing of financial eligibility applications.
- The process for reviewing, appealing and/or reconsidering eligibility decisions.
- Methods for public dissemination of information about the criteria and procedures for determining financial eligibility for assigned counsel.
- Confidentiality of information submitted by an applicant for assigned counsel.
- Any other topic pertinent to the implementation of equitable, efficient, and fair criteria and procedures for determining financial eligibility for assigned counsel.

SUBMISSIONS AND TESTIMONY: Persons interested in presenting oral testimony or making a written submission, or both, are asked to follow the procedures and timelines described below.

WRITTEN SUBMISSIONS: Any person wishing to submit written testimony only must do so by 5:00 p.m., Friday, July 19, 2019, at the contact information below.

ORAL TESTIMONY: If you are interested in testifying at a hearing, please send your request by mail to ILS at the address below, or by email to publichearings@ils.ny.gov. Your request must be received no later than fourteen (14) days before the hearing at which you propose to testify. Oral testimony will be limited to 10-15 minutes. Due to time constraints, we cannot guarantee that you will be selected to present oral testimony.

When requesting an invitation to provide oral testimony, please provide the following information:

1. Name and organizational affiliation;
2. A prepared statement or brief description of the topic(s) that you intend to address at the Public Hearing; and
3. The Public Hearing (details below) at which you wish to testify.

If requesting to give oral testimony, please indicate any accommodations (e.g., Americans with Disabilities Act, language access services, etc.) necessary to facilitate your participation.

Selected individuals will be notified of the proposed date and time of their testimony.

ASSIGNED COUNSEL APPLICATION: INSTRUCTIONS

The following are instructions for using the Application for Assignment of Counsel under County Law, Article 18-B to determine if an applicant is financially eligible for assignment of counsel.

Part I of the Application: Is the applicant presumptively eligible?

Part I elicits the information needed to determine if an applicant is presumptively eligible for assignment of counsel. An applicant shall be presumed eligible for the assignment of counsel in any one of the following circumstances:

1. If the applicant's net income is at or below 250% of the currently-updated Federal Poverty Guidelines. To make this determination, refer to the FPG Income Eligibility Chart, using the information about the applicant's net (take-home) pay and number of dependents in the household.
2. If the applicant is incarcerated or detained.
3. If the applicant is confined to a mental health facility.
4. If the applicant is currently receiving, or has recently been deemed eligible to receive, any need-based public assistance, including, but not limited to: Family Assistance (pursuant to TANF guidelines), Safety Net Assistance, Supplemental Nutrition Assistance (SNAP), Supplemental Security Income (SSI)/New York State Supplemental Program (SSP) assistance, Medicaid, and public housing.
5. If, within the past six (6) months, the applicant was deemed financially eligible for assigned counsel in another jurisdiction or by a court within the same jurisdiction.

A presumption of eligibility shall be overcome only if there is compelling evidence that the applicant possesses the current available financial resources to pay for a qualified attorney, the expenses necessary for a competent defense, release on bond, and reasonable living expenses.

If ANY of the above-stated presumptions applies, the applicant is presumed eligible, and counsel shall be assigned. The applicant does not have to complete Part II of the application.

If NONE of the above-stated presumptions applies, Part II of the application must be completed with assistance from the Court or screening entity.

The fact that an applicant does not meet one of these presumptions is not, in and of itself, reason to determine that an applicant is not eligible for assigned counsel.

Part II of the Application: Applicant's resources and living expenses

For applicants who are not presumptively eligible for assigned counsel, it is essential to consider, in addition to the information elicited in Part I, more detailed information about the applicant's current available resources (income and assets), living expenses, and financial liabilities. Part II of the application elicits this information.

Other Income and Assets

In completing Part II of the application, the following assets shall NOT be considered (unless an exception is specified):

- 1) Third-party income, including parental and spousal income (unless the third party indicates a present intent to pay, the applicant consents, and the arrangement does not interfere with the applicant's representation or jeopardize the confidentiality of the attorney-client relationship).
- 2) Receipt of child support payments.
- 3) Receipt of cash or non-cash stipends under a Federal or State need-based program, including, but not limited to, Public Assistance, SSI/SSP, TANF, SNAP, Unemployment, Workers Compensation, Section 8, or Medicaid reimbursements.
- 4) Primary residence of the applicant unless the fair market value of the home is significant, there is substantial equity in the home, and the applicant is able to access the equity in a time frame sufficient to retain private counsel.
- 5) Vehicles: Any vehicle that the applicant and his or her family members use for transportation to work, school, medical appointments, or for other basic life necessities shall not be considered in determining eligibility for assigned counsel.
- 6) Other non-liquid assets: Other non-liquid assets, such as secondary residences and vehicles not used for basic life necessities, shall not be considered as assets unless such assets have a demonstrable monetary value and are readily convertible to cash without impairing applicants' ability to provide for the reasonable living expenses of themselves and their dependents.

While non-liquid assets themselves shall generally not be considered in making eligibility determinations, income or revenue generated from such assets may be considered in determining whether an applicant is eligible for counsel. For example, rent received from a secondary home may be considered as an asset.

Applicant's Monthly Living Expenses

The reasonable living expenses of the applicant and dependents (including, for example, minors, parents, spouses, or domestic partners) shall be considered, as well as other debts and financial obligations. These include the following:

- 1) Medical expenses, including health insurance, of the applicant or any dependents.
- 2) Mortgage or rent payments needed to maintain the applicant's primary residence.
- 3) Utility payments.
- 4) Food costs.
- 5) Automobile insurance and loan payments needed to maintain an automobile necessary for work, education, medical appointments, and other basic life necessities.
- 6) Employment- or educational-related expenses, such as child or dependent care, transportation costs, clothing and supplies.
- 7) Child support payments made by the applicant to another.
- 8) Minimum monthly credit card payments.
- 9) Educational loan payments.
- 10) Non-medical expenses associated with age or disability.

For Court or Screener:

Are the applicant's resources insufficient to pay for a qualified defense attorney, a competent defense, release on bond, and reasonable living expenses?

An applicant is financially eligible for assignment of counsel when the applicant's current available resources are insufficient to pay for a qualified attorney, release on bond, the expenses necessary for a competent defense, and the reasonable living expenses of the applicant and any dependents.

This assessment requires consideration of the applicant's financial resources and obligations (elicited in Parts I and II of the application), as well as the resources needed to:

- 1) Pay for bail; and
- 2) Retain a qualified attorney and pay for other costs necessary for adequate representation in the relevant jurisdiction, given the nature of the case.

[Factors that may render a case more complex and thus more expensive include, but are not limited to: the seriousness of the charges; the need for investigative services; the need for expert services; the existence of DNA and other forensic evidence; the possibility of life-altering collateral consequences, including immigration consequences and registration or civil commitment; and the need for sentencing advocacy or social work services].

The sections of the application concerning Amount Needed for Bail and Cost of Retaining Private Counsel shall be completed. Based on all of the information elicited in the application, a determination shall be made as to whether the applicant is eligible for assignment of counsel. If it is determined that the applicant is not eligible for assignment of counsel, specify the reason.

Notice to the Applicant

The Applicant must be informed, in writing, of a determination that he or she is ineligible for assigned counsel. This written notice must include the reason for the ineligibility determination.

- 1) If the initial recommendation is made by a screening entity:
 - i. Complete the "Notice of Eligibility Recommendation," indicate the eligibility recommendation, and provide a copy of the completed Notice to the Applicant. This Notice is available at: www.ils.ny.gov.
 - ii. Provide the applicant with a copy of the document entitled, "Your Right to Seek Review of the Recommendation That You Are Not Eligible for Assigned Counsel." This notice of rights is available at: www.ils.ny.gov.
- 2) If the decision of ineligibility is made by the Court:
 - i. Provide the applicant with a completed copy of the document entitled, "Notice of Judge's Ineligibility Decision," which is available at: www.ils.ny.gov

Income Eligibility Presumption
Federal Poverty Guidelines Chart

An Applicant for assignment of counsel is presumptively eligible if the Applicant’s net income is at or below 250% of the current Federal Poverty Guidelines.

“Net Income” means an individual’s wages, interest, dividends, or other earnings after deductions for state, federal and local taxes, social security taxes, Medicare taxes, any union dues, retirement contributions, or other withholdings - in other words, “take home pay.”

(Screening entity, name of screener, and contact information)

Re: Application for Assigned Counsel

Date: _____

You recently applied to have a lawyer assigned to represent you in your criminal case. We screen all applicants to ensure that they are financially eligible for assignment of counsel. We then make a recommendation to the judge, who is responsible for making the final decision.

Based on the information you gave us, we will recommend to the judge that:

You are financially eligible for an assignment of counsel.

You are not financially eligible for assigned counsel.

If our recommendation to the judge is that you are not financially eligible for assigned counsel, a reason is provided on the attached form, which lists the information we relied upon in making the recommendation.

Additionally, if our recommendation is that you are not financially eligible for assigned counsel, you have the right to have this recommendation reviewed. Your rights are discussed in the attached document entitled, Your Right to Seek Review of the Recommendation that You are not Eligible for Assigned Counsel.

CONFIDENTIAL

REASON FOR INELIGIBILITY RECOMMENDATION

We have decided to recommend to the judge that you are not eligible for assigned counsel because you have enough income and/or assets to pay for a qualified attorney, a competent defense, and release on bond. Your living expenses and financial obligations do not prevent you from being able to pay these costs. This recommendation is based on the following information about the case and the financial information that you provided:

1) Nature of the case

a) We considered the type of charges against you, which are:

- Violation Misdemeanor Class C, D, or E felony Class A or B felony
 Sex offense, violent felony offense, or homicide offense

b) We also considered whether there is any indication that the case against you might be complex. Examples include cases that may require hiring an expert, an investigator, or forensic specialist, or that may involve complex legal issues, or mental health or mental competence issues. In your case, we determined:

- No indication of case complexity Indication of possible case complexity, as follows:

2) We considered your income, which is approximately $ _____ per week/month/year.

3) We considered your assets, which include (check all that are applicable):

- Bank accounts in the approximate amount of $ _____ Securities/stocks worth approximately $ _____
 Other assets (description and approximate value): _____

4) We considered your living expenses, including those of your dependents, which are approximately $ _____ per week/month/year.

5) We considered your current debt and other financial obligations, which include (check all that are applicable):

- Medical debt of approximately $ _____ Educational debt of approximately $ _____
 Other debt (describe nature and amount of debt): _____

6) We considered the following information about Bail in your case (check appropriate box):

- You were released on your own recognizance or on pre-trial release.
 Bail was set and you have the financial resources needed to pay it.

7) Other factors we considered or other reasons for our ineligibility recommendation:

APPENDIX F

-SAMPLE NOTICE OF RIGHT TO SEEK REVIEW-

YOUR RIGHT TO SEEK REVIEW OF THE RECOMMENDATION THAT YOU ARE NOT ELIGIBLE FOR ASSIGNED COUNSEL

You have been notified of our decision to recommend to the judge that you are not financially eligible for an assignment of counsel. If you are financially able to retain private counsel, you should do so immediately. If you are unable to retain counsel, you may exercise your right to seek review of our recommendation. There are two ways you can do this:

A. Request that we Reconsider our Recommendation that you are not Eligible

If you believe that our recommendation is incorrect, you may request that we review and reconsider your application. Your request may be made in person, by telephone, or in writing. Upon our receipt of your request for reconsideration, we will provide you with an opportunity to submit to us any additional information you may wish for us to consider, or you may explain to us why you believe you should be provided assigned counsel.

If you choose to request that we reconsider our recommendation, you are urged to do so as soon as possible. It is best for you to act as quickly as you can to minimize any delay in the possible appointment of counsel.

Following our reconsideration, we will notify you, in writing, whether your application for assigned counsel was granted or denied.

B. Request that the Judge Reconsider the Recommendation that you are not Eligible

You may also request that the judge who is presiding over your criminal case review and reconsider our recommendation that you are not eligible. You may do so whether or not you have already requested reconsideration by our office. However, if you did request our reconsideration, you should wait until you receive our written decision on your reconsideration request before making your request directly to the judge.

Please note that if you request that the judge reconsider our recommendation, we cannot guarantee the confidentiality of the information that you provided to us during the application process. The judge may order us to provide him or her with this information. Once we give it to the judge, it may become part of the court file that is available to the public.

This means that if you request the judge to reconsider our decision, you are waiving the right to confidentiality.

If you decide to ask the judge to review and reconsider our recommendation, we urge you to do so immediately. Please be advised that it is best for you to act as quickly as you can to minimize any delay in the possible appointment of counsel.

If you choose to appeal to the judge, you should wait until your next scheduled court appearance. During that appearance, you should explain to the judge that you disagree with our ineligibility recommendation. You should also tell the judge why you cannot afford to retain a lawyer and need to have one assigned to you. You should bring to court a copy of our written recommendation of ineligibility. You may also provide the judge with any additional information or documentation that you believe will be helpful to your application.

Please be advised that if you choose to request that a judge reconsider our recommendation, the judge will not necessarily treat your financial information as confidential or privileged, meaning, it may be used against you in this or any subsequent criminal proceeding. You also may be prosecuted if there is any false information contained in your application.

NOTE: When you are communicating with the judge about your application for assignment of counsel, do not discuss what happened in your case. Limit your discussion to your financial information. DO NOT DISCUSS THE FACTS OF YOUR CASE.

You may contact our office at (xxx) xxx-xxxx if you have any questions or need clarification of these instructions.

APPENDIX G

SAMPLE NOTICE OF JUDGE’S INELIGIBILITY DECISION

_____ COURT OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK

COUNTY OF _____

People of the State of New York,

v.

Docket No.

_____,

Defendant.

This matter concerns Defendant’s application for assignment of counsel. Defendant was arraigned on _____, 2016, on the following charges: _____

_____.

Upon review of Defendant’s application, the Court determines that Defendant is not financially eligible for assignment of counsel. The Defendant has enough income and/or assets to pay for a qualified attorney, competent defense, and release on bond. The Defendant’s living expenses and financial obligations do not prevent him/her from being able to pay these costs.

In reaching this decision, the Court has considered the following information:

1) Nature of the case

a) Type of charges (check applicable descriptor):

- Violation Misdemeanor Class C, D, or E felony Class A or B felony
- Sex offense, violent felony offense, or homicide offense

b) Indication that the case may be complex: Yes No

(Indicators of complexity include, but are not limited to the following: potential need for expert, investigative, or forensic services; existence of complex legal issue; existence of possible mental health or mental competence issue).

2) Defendant’s income as set forth in the application for assignment of counsel.

3) Defendant's assets, which include (check all that are applicable):

- Bank accounts
- Securities/stocks
- Other assets (general description): _____

4) Living expenses of Defendant (including any dependents), as set forth in the application for assignment of counsel.

5) Defendant's current debt or other financial obligations (check all that are applicable):

- Medical debt
- Educational debt
- Other debt (general description): _____

6) Bail (check appropriate box):

- Defendant was released on his/her own recognizance or on pre-trial release.
- Bail was set and Defendant has the financial resources needed to pay bail.

7) Other factors considered or other reasons for the ineligibility determination:

In order to maintain the Defendant's confidentiality, the particulars of his/her finances are not included in this Decision. The assigned counsel application, the reason for the ineligibility recommendation, and any other documents regarding the Defendant's financial situation will be maintained in the Court file and are ordered to be SEALED from public view.

This shall constitute the Decision and Order of the Court.
